

THE DAILY EXAMINER, AUGUST 2, 1881.

A FEW COMMENTS.

Mr Blake devoted a large portion of his time in an endeavor to prove that the Tariff bears unfairly on the poor man...

On the breadstall question, Mr. Blake was very wide of the mark. He said that the Maritime Provinces consume 800,000 barrels of flour annually...

It was quite amusing to notice the great aversion Mr. Blake has to a surplus. The "mixing and mudding" of the Grit party, resulting every year of their management in a heavy deficit...

About Town.

The prevailing feeling—DISAPPOINTMENT. NON-PARTIZAN VOTER.—"I'll not make up my mind till I hear Tyler."

We are desired to inform Mr. Blake that our poor people eat very little cornmeal.

The prevailing opinion—that Tyler will very easily dispose of the statements of Blake.

A CITIZEN says: "I think they did not make much impression."

A LADY says there is no greater difference between the prices of coarse and fine cloths and cottons now than there was before 1878.

RAILWAY MAN.—"Who told Anglin that $100,000 were expended in straightening curves? Anglin has been misled. Shame to mislead such a very fine man."

A WIDE awake man says he wishes the Government would stop a duty of two dollars a barrel on flour so that our farmers would be forced to leave off growing oats and pay attention to the raising of wheat which can be grown here as profitably as in Ontario or the Western States.

A HOUSEKEEPER asks: "Does Mr. Blake want us to believe that flour is grown in Boston? Has it not to be brought from the Western States by rail and canal at about the same cost as it is brought from Ontario? And, has not the consumer to pay the same cost in either case."

NOTES OF THE PAST MONTH.

By an Observer.

EUROPE AND THE EAST.

France is the European country that during the past month has attracted most attention. Affairs have not settled down in North Africa so quietly as had been at first expected. In the old French colony of Algeria, Mahommedan feeling has been aroused, and a leading chief, Bou Ammi, seemed at one time to give a great deal of trouble. In Tunis itself, there have been various insurrectionary movements; and the French have attacked and bombarded Sfax, an important sea port some little distance down the east coast, and just to the north of the Gulf of Gabes. The French say that this is done in support of the Bey's power, but lookers on doubt the disinterestedness of the motive. Meanwhile Tripoli is agitated, not knowing but that France may advance into that province, while Spain is said to be reckoning that if the east is so little, it may be worth her while to treat Morocco as France would Tunis. What is most noteworthy with reference to these movements is that they are part of the great break-up of the Mahommedan power that seems to be going on through all the countries where the Crescent rules. It seems that whatever political movements begin, from whatever quarter they arise, they bear ultimately upon the one point. It looks as though the present generation would see the total collapse of the Osmanli power which began to be formidable about five hundred years ago. It may even be that the downfall of Mahommedanism, after its existence of 1200 years, is not far off. Aid to this the strong Anti-Jewish feeling lately so fiercely manifested, which may, with great probability, have the effect of intensifying the desire of that people to leave Europe and settle in their ancient home, and what more likely than that this unexpressed desire, falling in exactly with the decay of the power that now holds their land, may lead to a complete change not only in the European but in the Palestinian provinces of Turkey.

Besides her foreign complications France has had some trouble in home matters, the irrefragable education question coming again to the front. While the Senate was considering a law that had been sent up from the Lower House, M. Jules Simon moved the insertion of a clause that Teachers should instruct their pupils in "their duty to God and their country." M. Ferry and the friends of the Government were in a rage. "What God," they asked with dismay, "are those children to be taught their duty to?" Is the State to decide who is the true God, or if there is any God at all? When the other side argued that on the whole, the God of the Christian was acknowledged in France, the secularists became more and more shocked at the unphilosophic assumption that was being made by the benighted believers. But despite the strongest effort of the Government, the clause was carried, and the fair face of French Secularism is now spotted and marred by the too successful efforts of the narrow minded bigots who want children taught in schools to believe that there is a God to whom they owe a duty.

Bulgaria has already experienced a coup d'etat. The freedom of this province, formerly under Turkish rule, was one of the results of the late Russo-Turkish War. Prince Alexander was put at its head, and a "constitution" of the most approved modern pattern, with ministerial responsibility and all the latest appliances, was provided for it, and of course found to suit it just as well as a steam engine would suit a birch-bark canoe, or as Saul's armour fitted David. But the changes that are being made are much greater than the necessities of the case required. Russian influence is very strong with Prince Alexander, and the opportunity given by the necessity to make some amendment to the constitution has been seized for the purpose of making the Government as like as may be to the one that is working with such delectable results in Russia. That the constitution should be suspended and the whole Government entrusted to the Prince was the proposal on which the elections were held; the strongest influences were brought to bear by the Government, and the result has been wholly favorable to the Prince, who can hereafter rule as a Russian Autocrat. But perhaps the people were wiser in judging that they were more fit to be governed than to govern themselves.

The condition of Italy is not a very promising one. Struggling to take a position as one of the "great powers," she has crippled and is still further crippling by enormous expenditure on her army and navy, her not too great resources. It may seem a paradox, but it is almost certainly the case, that it has been her misfortune to have had a sort of liberty given to her, instead of having won liberty for herself. Italy and Greece were the spoil children of nineteenth century liberalism, and are arriving to such maturity as they can reach with the usual qualities that spoil children develop.

Greece has already seen her flag hoisted over a portion of the territory lately awarded her, and is promised the rest very soon. It is the same thing that has been referred to above. Whatever happens the Porte stands sure to lose.

It will be remembered that when, not very long ago, the late Sultan Abd-ul-Aziz, was found dead in his palace, the assertion was that he had committed suicide. This report never received much credence, but it was generally believed that the ruling powers thought that the most convenient assumption to make, and that the matter would not again be brought up. To the great surprise of every one, the present Sultan the other day ordered that the death be again investigated. The result is that four servants of the palace have been found guilty of murdering Abd-ul-Aziz, and various high officials have been convicted of complicity and sentenced to death. Among them is Midhat Pasha. This statesman was by far the ablest man in the Palace, the one too, who, is most in accord with Western ideas, and who has earnestly striven to bring about genuine reform. The common opinion is that the Sultan has taken this way of getting rid of a too able and a troublesome adviser. As all the European Ambassadors are strenuously exerting themselves to save Midhat's life, he will probably be reprieved; but he will at least be banished. And so again the Porte loses, for it silences the strongest of the few voices that speak to it wisely.

In Afghanistan, Ayoub Khan has defeated the Ameer, and confusion increases, now that the strong arm of British authority has been withdrawn. GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND. The Land Bill has reached the House of Lords, and will probably be in committee before these words are read. The second reading may be assumed as a matter of course. If the Lords put their mark on the Bill at all, it will be in committee. But it is to be hoped that they will not attempt any important changes. To do so will be to make themselves responsible for the failure which is as likely to be the result of an unamended as of an amended Bill. But it is not worth while commenting on probabilities when the actual facts will so soon be known.

The discovery of half-a-dozen infernal machines on board an Atlantic steamer in England, will not tend to conciliate the feelings of the English towards the Irish in America or at home. The people of the United States are in no mood just now to think lightly of the work of assassins, and the feeling of indignation is as strong on this side of the water as it is in England. Even on the low ground of self-interest it behooves the authorities of the United States to do all they can to stop such crimes. A steamer from Boston at this time of year, would assuredly have American citizens as the majority of her passengers. It is terrible to think of what would have happened had but one of these infernal machines exploded in mid-ocean. One more steamer "never heard of again," and hundreds of innocent victims, after a few brief moments of agony, sacrificed by the cowardly and blood thirsty ruffians who set themselves to avenge the wrongs of Ireland.

In Ireland itself matters are much quieter. A few arrests have been made, but on the whole the strong arm of the law is once more getting the upper hand. When news came of a murder in an English railway carriage, and of the body of the victim being thrown out of the window, probably the first thought of most of us was how much safer is our mode of railway travelling than is the English; but almost directly after came the account of a train in Kansas having been boarded by a gang of robbers, a conductor and a passenger shot, and some thousands of dollars carried off from the express safe. But, notwithstanding that, our way is doubtless the safer; though in the wilds of the far west it may not give absolute security. The police in England seem to have surpassed themselves in rapidly allowing Lefroy to escape. That he has been captured at all is due to a lodging house keeper.

Souris Notes.

MONDAY, Aug. 1st, 1881. The Volunteers are drilling. Drill-Sergeant Campbell, of Charlottetown, is in command. The opening of new roads appears to be the principal excitement now. The one leading to Knight's wharf was very much needed. A road opening out at Dr. Ford's corner has received attention at last. Streets of minor importance are being surveyed and opened. A car load of mackerel, shipped by Matthew, McLean & Co., left here for Boston on the 27th ult. This is the first lot of mackerel shipped from the island the present season. The steamer "Scud" has once more visited us. She arrived here on Wednesday, bound for the Magdalen Islands; returning, she touched here on Friday. She is painted black this year, and is fitted up in A 1 style. At some future time we will furnish you with a more lengthy report of her repairs and accommodation. The Tea at East Point passed off very pleasantly. A more favorable day could not be desired. About 1800 persons attended. I "guess" they put in a good time. The net receipts amounted to $730. Not so bad. The product of an anthracite coal for the week ending July 16th, 1881, was 685,532 tons, against 363,340 tons same week in 1880; and for the year from January 1st, 1881, 13,963,325 tons, against 11,107,215 same time last year.
