MILLINERY TRENDS

Color and a movement toward the back are two distinguishing attributes of the newest millinery offerings. Mr. Arnold combines the two trends deftly in a young, pretty hat, the flowing drapery of ruby red satin drawn back over a matching red velvet coif and caught with a narrow bow of red velvet baby ribbon.

MARY HAWORTH

Girl Wants To Locate Beau

Dear Mary Haworth: I am trying to locate someone in the air force. The story is too complex and involved to discuss in detail, but I must locate him—and I can't find a way to do so.

Letters which I have addressed to Mitchell air force base, where he positively was stationed formerly, now are being returned marked "address unknown."

Is there any way I might have him traced via the mails, and have my letters forwarded to his present address, wherever he may be? Surely his name and serial number should be sufficient to provide a clue to his whereabouts.

Harry (I'll call him) and I kept company for almost three years. The biggest problem was his mother. She is quite the domineering type with definite psycholpithic tendencies. She did much to hinder the growth of our relationship and finally succeeded in contributing to the severance of our bonds of love. She even called secretly to threaten me, then denied the incidents to her son.

MUST SEE HIM

I daren't write to his home address; I am certain my letters would be intercepted. Still I feel I must see him—and it must be through the air force address. Can you help me at all in this? Do you have any suggestions as to how I might locate him? I know he is in the vicinity of New York City or New Jersey.

Even if you can't help me, still I will thank you for any suggestions. In trying to help me, you might also be helping some other girl to find her love again. I don't know where else to turn, in search of the information I want so desperately.

H.R.

RED CROSS HELP

Dear H.R.: I have discussed your appeal with a spokesman for the home service department of the American National Red Cross; and I am happy to say that the prospects look good for catching up via mail with your lost love.

As it happens, the Red Cross—through its global network of friendly services to men in the armed forces and their families—often has proved helpful in repairing such breaks in human relations. And there is sound reason to hope that it may be able to perform this favor in your case.

Right off, the local counsellor offers this reminder: When a serviceman leaves one military base for another, usually the postal authorities at the old post have a record of his forwarding address. Thus, a letter addressed to Harry, in case of his last known station, and also marked "please forward," should be delivered to him, eventually, So, have you tried this?

TRY PENTAGON

The counsellor's next reminder is that the nation's military defence establishment, housed in the Pentagon in Washington, D.C., keeps an indexed file of all men in the armed forces and their current stations.

Thus it is suggested that you might write to the department of the air force, care-of Pentagon, Washington, D.C., enclosing a liberally stamped, sealed, addressed letter to Harry. Ask the air force secretary's office to forward the letter. Explain that your mail to Harry has been coming back marked "address unknown."

The Red Cross spokesman feels confident that such a request will be handled considerately by the air secretary's staff—and as a result, Harry should get your letter.

Finally, it is suggested that you get the whole story off your chest, to a home service counsellor at the Red Cross office nearest you. The small town through which you write is adjacent to a big city; and in this big city the American National Red Cross has a chapter (check the telephone directory for the location).

The Red Cross does a fine job of "family relations" counselling, which is a form of help you need just now, to revive your sick morale.

KEEP IN TRIM

Smaller Dress Size Will Make You Feel Younger

By IDA JEAN KAIN

To be able to slip smoothly into a dress a size smaller will boost your morale and help you look and feel at least 10 pounds younger.

The number of pounds between sizes has been established in a scientific system of sizing developed under the direction of Mansfield Lonie of the U.S. department of commerce. According to this system which is based on averages, the standard number of pounds between dress sizes is 10 to 16, depending on the size range.

In the medium size range there are 12 to 14 pounds, and in small sizes only 10 pounds from one size to the next. Above size 16 is misses' and 36 is women's, there are 16 pounds from one size to the next smaller . . or larger.

There is a weight range within which you can wear a certain size dress. However, the number of pounds to your next size depends on how close you are to the top weight limit on your present size. If you are straining the seams, then you would have to take off the full amount. But if you can almost wear your smaller size, perhaps 6 to 8 pounds off the fit smoothly into a younger size.

CONTROL SIZE

Now about measurements: The bust, waist and hip measurement control your dress size. In the women's sizes, up to 38, there is a 2 inch difference in each of the basic measurements from one size to the next. In misses' dresses, between sizes there is a 1½ inch difference in the bust, waist and abdominal extension, and a 2 inch difference in the hip measurement.

Take this tip—concentrate on waist whittling. Dresses are fitted at the waist and consequently there is a minimum of leeway on that measurement. Here's the score: Perfect waist measurement for size 12 is 25⅝; size 14, 17; size 16, 28½; size 18, 30½ inches.

Now you know where you stand. Figure out how many pounds and how many inches stand between you and that younger size, and work enthusiastically toward your goal. Happy slimming!

Tomorrow: The easy way out of exercise.

SAY KING PROPOSED

British newspapers have published the story of a proposal of marriage by Crown Prince Olav of Norway to the Duchess of Kent, aunt of Queen Elizabeth, a few months before Olav became king. The proposal was made through King Frederick of Denmark and was "graciously declined" by the duchess. The Duke of Kent, brother of King George VI, was killed in an airplane crash in 1942. The story has been officially denied.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Cottage Or Castle--It Is Still Called Home

Today, it was to the harvesting of potatoes at Rob's our workers went, the children hailing the prospect with nice anticipation. With the small acreage we now grow, it comes as a pleasant event, this foregathering of all at the digging. There is the comradely side to it, and also the magic of seeing the hidden treasure of the tuber-hills being revealed in the wake of the old fashioned beater digger it pleases our farmers still to use. The day contributed ideal weather to the happy chore to have it ended by sunset.

Sunny and sweet with the fragrance of season, a rare essence distilled of woodland and garden, of fresh-stirred red field and meadow, and blessed with a mild wind, this was a jewel of a day, another flawless gem in the setting of this delightful workaday week.

"It's a poor place indeed that can't afford one lady" we laughed to Jeanie from the house across the lane when coming by she chanced to discover us in the old armchair, in a state that was extremely idle this morning.

Continuing idle in the face of the wide-spread industry of the time of year off farms, we, in the afternoon joined a farm-couple in an excursion which in a fine machine carried us a distance away.

"Where to?" we asked at the outset.

"No particular objective" one replied with a smile. "The day is so lovely it called us to roam. There may not be another like this left in the year — certainly not this one we have!"

What a pleasant outing it proved to be! We followed broad highways and explored byways, some new to us, others vaguely remembered though much changed through the years. Hilltops gave us enchanting views of reaches of countryside, with maybe a village set down in the valley, its white church lifting its spire heavenward in the autumn blue. Valleys gave us scenes of homes, content in their groves and gardens, their fields and woodlands climbing in a matchless tapestry the slopes above. And here was a tidal river bridged., and there was the sea. And everywhere the gold of mellow sunlight. The gold too of the tinted leaf. And over all the rich charm of the Autumn.

With nice memories we are at home again — come back to James and the family that are ours. Back to bake the loaves we rested in our going, the aroma of which scenting the rooms remind us that we live "Not by bread alone but" by every word . . "and we are sure the better for every intangible loveliness we may glean along Life's sometimes trying way. Home, be it cottage or "castle," what a "haven sweet" it can be!

"Home!
My very heart's desire is safe
Within thy walls;
The voices of my loved ones,
friends who come,
My treasured books that rest in
niche serene,
All make more dear to me, thy haven sweet.
Nor do my feet,
Desire to wander out, except that they May have the glad return at eventide, —
Dear Home."

Until Monday — Diary — Goodnight. . . . .
