Literature And Life

By BOOKMAN MY TEACHERS

I have always had Marcus Aurelius' references to his teachers in his "Meditations" as most affecting, and the passing of high two thousand years has not dried the dew of tears that is still on them: He refers to his mother twice: "She taught me to have a regard for religion, to be generous and open-handed, and to forbear from doing anybody an ill turn. By her I was bred to a plain and inexpensive way of living, different from the luxury of the rich."

When we look back and try to assess the influences for good, none of us can leave her out. Pardon a personal reference. Through my own mother died when I was only nine and she but thirty-five, she left a mark that the world's rough hand has not been able to rub out. Some years ago, Dr. George Stewart, head of the American College of Surgeons, on receiving an honorary degree from Dalhousie, paid a fine compliment to his teacher at Malagaah when he was a lad. Dr. H. F. Monro declared it was as fine as he had ever heard.

M. when the colorful ceremony of seating the Assembly officers will be carried out, followed by a Pageant directed by the members of Alpha Lodge No. 10. This will be followed by a special session of the Assembly to receive new members attending for first time. The Assembly will be presided over by Mrs. Anna Snow, of Sydney Mines, as President, Mrs. Mary Bryant of Bridgewater, N. S. as Secretary and Mrs. Buelah Speedy, of St. Stephen, N. B., as Treasurer.

All branches of the Order have enjoyed a prosperous year since last meeting, and it is expected the reports to be submitted will show material progress in the several ways by which the prosperity is measured. The Grand Officers in all departments have been busy during their term, and each in his territory has done much official visiting, and thus is in possession of important general information. These suggestions when placed before the several grand bodies for their consideration and action, will assist in the furtherance and perpetuation of their work. Always there are new features being introduced, that are not intended to change the general policy of fraternal assistance which has been the foundation principle of the I.O.O.F. since its institution 132 years ago, but rather to bring the assistance required today in line with services the Order performs.

Founding of Order

Little is known of the founder of the I. O. O. F. during his early life other than that he was born in England, grew to manhood there and for a time was a member of what was known as a fraternal society. He had learned a mechanic's trade but in no way was he a "super man" or had he obtained much in the way of a common education. He made up his mind early in life to make America his homeland. He had plenty of ambition and faced a life of golden promise. He evidently had ideas with regard to the formation of a fraternal society as this was almost his first venture after landing in America. He became acquainted with another Englishman who was in about the same position as himself but who enjoyed a better education. They were tradesmen in the same field and about the same age, and both had been members of a fraternal order in England.

Some time elapsed during which they no doubt exchanged ideas regarding fraternalism, they decided to try through the press to locate others who were situated as themselves. In this they were successful with the result that FIVE men sat down to consider the formation of a fraternal society organized upon the general principles which they would decide. This being accomplished, the first lodge to be known as the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, was organized at Washington, D. C., April 25th, 1819 to be known as Washington No. 1. The remarkable situation regarding this first meeting was, the pattern of the principles and the constitution adopted for the carrying on of the work of the new order and baby lodge. It is difficult at this time to comprehend the conditions prevailing in Europe and America in 1819. Many years of war had just been terminated in Europe. In America there were no transportation facilities of any kind with the exception of the blazed trail and the canoe; poor if any mail service with very poor home conditions, and what there were, were hard to get. Employment, especially for tradesmen, was another very poor venture.

Under these forbidding conditions, the five men sat down to formulate plans for what is now the I. O. O. F., applied their ability to the task at hand, and by a wise choice of foundation principles and working practices, which are in the forefront today. Never in the 132 years of the existence of the I. O. O. F. has any change been suggested that was able to win favor in the governing bodies of the Order.

Thoughts For Our Time

By His Eminence Cardinal McGuigan (Copyright)

Already the newspapers are filled with news about preparations for the coming visit to Canada of the Princess Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh. It is characteristic that a great deal of the publicity will be devoted to less superficial interest—details about decorations and receptions, the crowds that will surely greet the Royal visitors all across the Dominion, journalistic legends about the private life of the Royal Family.

Underlying all this "publicity" are feelings that are more difficult to express, and more worthy of our reflection. This will be something more than the reception of any ordinary celebrity, whether a great athlete or some profound genius; there is a certain national pride involved, and behind everything the fact that when we greet Her Royal Highness we salute at the same time the King.

It is becoming quite exceptional in this age even to have a king. Nearly all the great powers of today's world are either republics or tyrannies; our own ideas on government no longer include the functions given to kings by our ancestors. Visitors from the United States find that our politics and our administration are in general not so very different from their own; at least, the fact that we have a King, while they do not, does not seem to make any great difference. And yet this part of our "constitution" is one that we hold very dear, and we cannot help feeling uncomfortable when the King's position is described as that of a "figurehead"—because, of course, that description is quite misleading. We would not want a mere "figurehead"; we are proud of the King.

Part of our feeling comes from the fact that this practice of having a King is a connection with older and what many feel to have been better times. Our individual rights are rooted in the Magna Carta, and our law in the British Common Law; all that we prize highest comes to us from our ancestors; and when we pay homage to the King, or when we greet his daughter with rejoicing, we feel another bond with the past.

How does a King come to assume his position? Certainly not by election, nor by any seeking of his own; the office is all the more dignified for that reason. On the surface his title to kingship is an accident of birth; it comes to him from his father and he in turn will pass it on to his children. But because we are a Christian nation, we know the deeper source of his authority. On all our coins there is the image of the King's head, and in Latin, this inscription: "Georgius VI Dei Gratia Rex: "George VI, King by the Grace of God". Thus the King is at once a sovereign himself and a reminder of a greater Sovereign in heaven.

The Royal Family is a sign to us of our most precious endowments: our finest traditions in the past; our national unity in the present; and, outside of time our place in the universe as subjects of our Sovereign in Heaven. Their personal example of unselfish devotion to duty, the obvious happiness of their family life, add a real affection to our pride and patriotism. Let us not forget them in our prayers. In the words of the Psalmist (XXIX, 9): "O Lord, save the King, and hear us in the hour when we call upon Thee."
