

THE DAILY EXAMINER

MARCH 10, 1899

DAIRY INSPECTION.

This matter was discussed by THE EXAMINER a few days ago. Two propositions were elaborated: (1) That the appointment of an inspector and instructor in respect to dairying in this province is expedient and necessary; (2) that the appointment must not be made under any suspicion of political partisanship. In support of the first proposition we referred to the loss that has been sustained by our farmers because of the inequality of the oats sent to the British market when those of the careful and careless were all shipped together, without inspection; in support of the latter we instanced what followed. Premier Farquharson's interference with Mr. Dillon at the dairymen's last meeting in Kindergarten Hall.

The Guardian and The Patriot, supporting the Government, have overlooked the main points of THE EXAMINER's article, but have adverted upon the latter illustration, taking ground (of course) against Mr. Dillon and in favor of Premier Farquharson.

It will be seen that THE EXAMINER's article has not particularly concerned the conduct of either of the gentlemen in this regard. We have been informed that Mr. Dillon spoke for just eight minutes by the watch; while others say that he spoke for fifteen minutes. He was dealing with the question of non-partisanship and independence on the part of the inspector when Premier Farquharson interfered to stop his speech. Some persons say that Premier Farquharson's interference was "rude" "unseemly," "forwardly," etc.; but the Government insists that it was all right and necessary. The dispute in no way detracts from, but rather adds to, the force of THE EXAMINER's contention that the appointment must be non-partisan and non-political; for if such results follow partisan interference before the appointment is made, what distractions and difficulties may reasonably be expected if partisanship shall govern the appointment and the appointee?

The Guardian argues that Premier Farquharson was responsible for the conduct and success of the meeting, because he was largely instrumental in having it called. This idea is, certainly, contrary to the notions of propriety generally entertained. Those who know most about such matters inform us that the chairman, the presiding officer is, in any case, the proper medium through whom the conduct of the speakers and the character of their speeches are regulated. However this may be, it is certain that there was such clamor and confusion subsequent to Premier Farquharson's interference with Mr. Dillon, over the head of the chairman, that business was impossible until after Mr. Dillon had risen and quieted the assemblage.

The five minute limit did not, as the Guardian insinuates, at all apply to Mr. Dillon; for he spoke before, and not after, Professor Robertson; and he was evidently speaking with eloquence and effect. If the organs are right in saying that Premier Farquharson's motive was merely to forward the business of the meeting, it is quite clear that he took the wrong way to accomplish his object.

Here let us say that we have to desire to impugn Premier Farquharson's motives in this regard. So far, we have only dealt with the facts of the case as they have been developed. Premier Farquharson's motives may be right. If so, it is to be regretted that he has, by calling Mr. Dillon down when he was speaking of the necessity of non-partisanship in the appointment of a Dairy Inspector, confirmed the impression that he, as leader of the Government, desires to control the appointment. We shall see, for certain what his motives are when the appointment is made.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Said the late Mr. M. C. Cameron when the Yukon deal had passed the Commons against the will of the Liberals: "Now we shall see what the Senate is made of. If it does not kill this fraud it ought to be killed itself."

Whether it is that the Riviera is going out of fashion with British and American visitors, or whether it is the pin pricking policy of that country's Government that causes it to be out of favour, it would be hard to say. Anyhow, while having a very bad season, they are the world, Cairo is very busy that part of with visitors of all nations, and crowded is said to be quite a matter. The Nile full of people crowded with dahabieh anxious to do the Nile.

Emile Loubet, the new President of France, is a man about 60, of medium height, with plump face, thick hair, greyish beard, sparkling eyes and an agreeable smile. Endowed with good intellectual attainments, he is a fluent orator, persuasive and clever like a typical son of the south. In private life, he enjoys an excellent record as a model husband, a good father and a faithful friend. Most of his relations are retail traders, and he is not ashamed of them. Quite averse to showy ceremonial and pompous social manifestations, he is not likely to follow in M. Faure's footsteps by concentrating his attention on the ornamental attributes of his office to the exclusion of more practical, serious questions. M. Loubet is not a rich man, his entire fortune not exceeding £20,000. As President of the Senate he receives £2,800 per annum. His present emoluments aggregate £48,000 a year. Politically M. Loubet is a Moderate Republican, with Radical leanings. He is firmly Anti-Clerical. It now remains to be seen whether he will resolutely exercise his prerogatives in order to strengthen the hands of the Ministers and facilitate the settlement of the great Dreyfus question.

The policy of expansion is said to be steadily gaining ground in the United States—even among the ladies. It is stated that the State Legislature of Wisconsin has just introduced a "Bill to protect the health of the misses, old maids, and married women of the State of Wisconsin by making a law to prohibit tight-lacing."

Our new Fit-Reform Cabinet Department will be ready next week, and we will be in a position to show you that the Fit Reform Clothing Co. is very much alive.—Prowse Bros.

How it Was Discovered!

Soaps made after old methods, loosen dirt but slowly, and Women used to rub clothes briskly between the hands or on a board.

This process went on till one day somebody estimated that clothes received more wear on wash day than on every other day of the week.

Then our soap maker went to work and after patient study, the richest and best were ingeniously combined to which was added a new scientific discovery of marvellous cleansing properties and was evolved. The cheapest, the safest, and purest soap now on the market. No effort or expense has been spared to make it the best.
