Fresh Corn Is Served Mexican-Salad Style

SUCCULENT ears of sweet corn now appear in markets months in advance of the usual season, because plant - breeders have produced new strains since World War II.

This makes possible an increased sugar, content which enables fresh corn to retain sufficient sweetness to last until it reaches the retail stores.

Up To The Homemaker

From this point on, it's up to the homemaker to rush this nice fresh corn into her refrigerator in record time, and to cook it as soon as possible.

I suggest ears of fresh corn be cut into halves for easier eating on-the-cob," adds the Chef, "A plastic corn-handle (sold at 5 and 10 cent stores) can be stuck into one end for easy eating.

"It takes the eating of corn - the - cob out of the gnawing, playing - the - accordion process, which, in my considered opinion, is suited only to barbecues and camping out.

"In France, if it could be obtained, fresh corn would be served after the entree as a separate course."

Flynn-Murphy Vows Pledged

On Saturday, April 11, 1964, in St. James R.C. Church, Georgetown, Rev. L.B. Dooley, united in marriage Mary Joan Flynn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Flynn, Georgetown, and LAC Earl Murphy, son of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Murphy, also of Georgetown.

The bride, given in marriage by her uncle, Leo Flynn of Cardigan, wore a street length dress of pink nylon sheer over rayon taffeta, with a satin trimmed jacket of matching lace. She was attended by Mrs. Robert Burke of Georgetown wearing yellow taffeta combined with nylon sheer. White accessories and corsages of mixed carnations completed the costumes—each carried a white prayer book.

Groomsman was Mark Murphy, brother of the groom, while a cousin Bernard Murphy of Elmira ushered the guests. During the Mass hymns were sung by the girls' choir under the direction of the organist, Jane Batchilder.

Following the ceremony a reception for 35 guests was held at the home of the groom's parents. A three tier bridal cake topped with miniature bride and groom centered the table. Father Dooley asked the blessing. The groom responded to the toast to the bride. To extend best wishes, brothers and sisters of the groom contacted the newly-weds by cable from Germany, and by 'phone from Vancouver, Toronto, Cornwall and Newfoundland.

On their return from a short honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. Murphy were guests of honor at a shower held in St. James Parish hall. Gifts opened by Naverne Blackett—verses read by Paulette Burke.

Music was provided by Cosmas Sigsworth, uncle of the bride, Earl DeCoursier and David Pitre. Lunch was served.

The groom is stationed at the RCAF Base, Summerside.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Perennials Are Popping In Ellen's Lawn Border

This afternoon our farmers, reckoning "We might as well shear those first ewes, before they go out to pasture" undertook presently that chore.

"Come!" Peter called, summoning us out of doors with some excitement in his voice "and see what they're doing to the sheep."

What a noise of plaintive bleating there was in the shed, as in turn and smartly a fleece was clipped from a ewe, and she returned to the pen.

"But the lambies still cry" Peter commented wonderingly.

"They don't recognize their mothers now that they have their coats off - not at once" we said. "They're... well, it's as though your Mommie came out wearing a new or different dress to that you were used to. You wouldn't know her — not right away, would you?"

"I'd know my Mommie!" he replied, smiling confidently.

So the first shearing came. The labor was considerably lessened this time by the use of (borrowed) "power" shears, and the venture consumed less time.

"Shear your sheep in the increase of the moon" an old saying has it" and the wool will grow on their bodies thicker and stronger than before." Then alas and alack for us at Alderlea, this was done in the moon's dark!

Haze of damp lingered over the fields today, and the wind was coolish which came in the train of the morning's electrical storm and showers. Alex, catching up now with the seventh milestone of his birth, caught the spirit of the season. He cleaned out the rabbit hutch, put in fresh bedding, and wondered what he should give Hoppy his white rabbit that the pet would most like.

"He already has hay there, and grain and carrots. What can I give him, by way of a treat?"

"Some handfuls of the new grass?" we suggested.

"Yes!" he smiled happily, "he will surely like that!"

And our Friday was a lightly clouded day. One come in pleasant weather, it seemed, to have us remember that is our lives not every day, even in the Maytime is always sunkist and bright.

Now our plantings of perennials, the peonies and bleeding heart, columbine and poppies and lilies, our old - time friends appear in the border to be counted. We checked them this evening with Alex and Peter, who had been helping us tidy our lawn, and presently would go to enjoy a last swing of their day, on the rope - swing which hangs from a stout branch of the birch tree. And together we loved the daffodils and hyacinths now commencing to blossom, and found that tulips were budding.

"Let's this year have plenty of pansies" Alex proposed. "They are, I believe, my favorite flower."

And Friday is a favorite day. But each and every day of the Maytime, gives us those nice scenes of season of which memories are made.

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good - night....

MARY HAWORTH

Attempted Self-Giving Is Met With Reserve

Dear Mary Haworth: My husband and I have a problem with which I am unable to cope.

He was brought up in a home filled with friction and unhappiness, a stranger to warm considerate affection. He has always been isolated emotionally and now seems to enjoy this mode of behavior.

His relationship with his mother was scarred by injuries, insults and strife. Consequently he doesn't know how to show affection or give himself in companionship. He would rather avoid sex, for example, which I think weakens the sense of closeness that should exist between man and wife.

Nor does he call me by name, another symptom of unfriendly reserve or even unconscious hostility, as you explained in a recent column. Also he lacks genile manners, a hangover from his rearing.

My childhood homelife was happy and I want that atmosphere in marriage. But how can I show him the way? In my hasty anger and disappointment at certain facets of his behavior, I have already damaged my cause, I fear.

He must develop faith in me before he can relax his reserve, I know. How can I convince him that the life I speak of is real? That a partnership of basic mutual love and expressed consideration is what marriage is meant to be? How can I help him develop the ability to feel and share love?

A.F.

Dear A.F.: It has been quite a chore, sifting, sorting and editing your repetitive phraseology, to knit together a condensed coherent account of your problem as stated in your characteristic fashion.

As I get the picture, you are asking the impossible of me and of yourself. You want me to tell you how to transform your emotionally withdrawn, approximately eunuch-type husband into a satisfactorily heterosexual, ardent, sympathetic, cooperative, happy-hearted lover and marriage partner.

The fact is that only your husband could bring about such a change in himself, assuming he has the potentials to work with. And he can do it, if at all, only if he is powerfully motivated by an inward and personal urge to become fully the man you would like him to be.

Assuming, for the sake of discussion, that he has the potentials of full growth, and the urge to grow, still he would have to diligently search for, find and latch onto expert congenial psychoanalytic help, in order to lift himself by his bootstraps from hungover infancy (figuratively) to sturdy manhood.

Neither you nor I could push, pull or cajole him along that wearisome route of achievement, if he himself isn't already well disposed to make the essential persistent effort, when the idea that it might be done is suggested to him.

Proverbs warn womankind of the folly of marrying unsuitable men with the notion of "reforming" them to taste. And it may be that there is no solution to your grievous stalemate in marriage, except to renounce your efforts to share love with this fellow who shrinks from your attempted self-giving as if it were an embarrassing intrusion upon his accustomed seclusiveness.

The best advice I can give is to bring this article to your husband's attention. If his mind seems open—or, at any rate, not closed with a bang!—you might try to persuade him to read (and discuss with you) Erich Fromm's book "The Art of Loving" (Harpers), which ably undertakes to educate and integrate both intellect and feeling.

Household Hints

Save leftover slivers of soap in a jar and when the jar is half-filled, add boiling water to make a jelly. Great for pretreating soiled necklines and cuffs.

Canadians in Cyprus

Cyprus is a place of sunlight beauty, soaring mountains, ruined castles, priceless antiquities—and an implacable hatred. It was amid this atmosphere of conflict and violence that the men of Canada's Royal 22nd Regiment and the Royal Canadian Dragoons landed in Cyprus as part of the United Nations peace-keeping force. This Saturday, Weekend Magazine Staff Writer Philip Smith records a visit with Canadian troops on the embattled island where he learned that keeping peace in this strife-torn atmosphere is a delicate art, demanding at some times a diplomat's tact, at others a soldier's toughness.
