PERISHED IN YUKON.

A P. E. Islander in Search of Gold Meets Death.

The same sad tale of death in the search for gold comes from the Yukon region. In April, 1898, a party of five, including Peter P. Christie, of Maxville, Glengarry Co., Ont., and John Macdonald, also of Glengarry, left Edmonton for the golden North. When they reached the Liard River the three men who had joined Christie and Macdonald returned and endeavored to induce the others to return also. They, however, kept on, and went about a hundred miles north of Liard River. From that place they sent the last letters their friends ever received from them, written in April, 1899, and despatched eighty miles to a trading post by Indians. Nothing was heard of the two from that time till June of this year, when a rumor came from Dawson City that Christie was dead. Here the story takes a different course. In the summer of 1899 a party of miners headed by John Marshall, were on their way from Peace River to Dawson Lake in the District of Cassiar. On August 9th they met two Macdonalds on the Finlay River, who were on their way to Fort Graham. One of these was the Macdonald who went out with Christie; the other was some Dan Macdonald from Prince Edward Island. When and where Christie and his partner met this Macdonald is unknown. The story the Macdonald told to Marshall's party was that some time previous John P. Christie became ill, with appendicitis they supposed. The little group struggled onward. Christie was unable to carry his supplies, and the others carried them in turn. Finally he became so weak that he had to be assisted. The Macdonalds then would carry the baggage on some distance and return for their comrade, thus traversing the ground three times. At last Christie could go no further. On August 6 he died at Summit Lake, at the head waters of the Finlay River, and was buried in a hillside. The Macdonalds then proceeded toward Fort Graham, and were met by Marshall. They were given an oil boat by him which he had found in a sand bar on the Finlay River. With it they went down the river to the Fort, but this they never reached. Their fate is unknown. Mr Marshall afterwards met some Indians who said there was a dangerous rapid further down the Finlay River. In all probability the Macdonalds have perished in it.

A WARNING.

SIR,—Some of the deputies in the election of McLellan in West Prince are now admitting that "they were shown how to fix the ballots but didn't." There is no doubt that in the two portals—East and West Prince—the machine was at work, and at least in Mr. Lefurgey's case the seat was stolen from him. Valiant men must be put in the polls to watch those rascals this time.

OBSERVER.

FOR WOUNDED SOLDIERS—The People's Journal, a leading Scotch paper, says that in speaking recently at Huddersfield, Mr. Wyldmar, Under-Secretary for War, dealt with the question of pensions for soldiers, and said that the Government had provided that every man slightly injured in war should have a pension of one shilling and sixpence, and each totally incapacitated for work two shillings and sixpence a day for the remainder of his life. We owed it also not only to our soldiers, but to ourselves, that the State should directly, without any intermediation, contribute to the support of the widows of the men who died for the Empire.
