Capt Watched Friends Die

By Dave Butler
HALIFAX (CP)—Gabriel Sinegre, the chief engineer of the Douala—one of 17 men who survived the sinking of the 4,300-ton French freighter Saturday in a wild storm off Newfoundland.

"The captain ordered them to jump into the sea and only six men made it," Sinegre said. "I think there were 10 that jumped but only three made it. Seven of them were killed and I did not see them again." The captain went down with his ship.

Two men died when the view from the first lifeboat which pulled away from the Douala after the captain had ordered the crew to abandon ship.

The five-year-old vessel was washed away after a huge sea washed away her hatch covers and left her open.

Sinegre, interviewed by telephone at the Channel Cottage Hospital near Peterborough, told of watching two other crew members die of exposure. "Our fingers and toes froze—it was so cold—so long." They were in the lifeboat for 27 hours.

Two men died when they were crushed to death between the lifeboat and the transport department's stretcher.

"They were in such a hurry to get out of the lifeboat that we and we were thrown against the ship. The first man crashed between the lifeboat and the ship and went under. He did not come up. We tried to get him out but he died before we could get him to hospital," Sinegre said.

Another man died when he fell overboard. The twelve survived to the elements after the ship foundered.

A total of at least 28 persons died in the fierce storm which swept across the Atlantic previous last week. Heavy seas, whipped by winds reaching 100 miles an hour off the coast of Newfoundland, caused the greatest loss of lives with the latest reported fatalities being those of two Newfoundland fishermen.

Also, an unidentified report from the French islands of St. Pierre-Miquelon said a body had been discovered by a fisherman. Officials believed the wreckage and the body may be from the coastal freighter Mary Pauline which sank Saturday between North Sydney, N.S., and Newfoundland. Six of the crew were lost.

Two men aboard the fishing boat Mary Pauline were presumed dead after the wreckage of the craft was found on Eberwold Island off the west coast of Nova Scotia. The Ruth and Lillian out of Westport, N.S., was reported to sink last Thursday during the height of the storm.

On land, at least six persons are known dead from various causes, attributed to the blizzard which dumped up to 22 inches of snow on some areas, accompanied by high winds. Most of the Mary Pauline were left little respite from adverse weather conditions as forecasts early today predicted disturbance would bring snow and strong winds into Nova Scotia and southern New Brunswick today. However, the outlook was not as bleak as had been earlier forecast.

Journey Of Hope Plans Are Laid

By JOHN EARLE
VATICAN CITY (Reuters)—Preparations for Pope Paul VI's "Journey of Hope" to the Holy Land continued today as Christians and non-Christians alike pondered his first Christmas message as the Roman Catholic pontiff.

Speaking from the library of the Vatican palace in a message televised in Italy and relayed to broadcasting stations throughout the world, Pope Paul touched on the problem of a peace "bargain" more on fear than faith.

He said "all humanity could be saved by the peace maintained in part by 'terror of deadly weapons' were broken. SPEAKERS OF HUNGER.

The pontiff also referred to the problem of world hunger and solutions for it.

"It has now been scientifically proven to us that more than 100 million people have not enough food."

MARY HAWORTH

Teen-ager In Trouble Asks For Counselling

Dear Mary Haworth: I became pregnant when I was 16 a year ago. Nobody knew except my boy friend. He is 30 and I have been going with him for three years.

Well, I was lucky. I had a miscarriage and nobody ever knew about it. Now I am 17 and I want to get married next year when I am 18 and nobody can stop us, because we really do love each other.

My real problem is that he wants me to try to lose this baby by doing exercises, etc., and I don't do before. But I don't feel like it. I want to have this baby because my conscience bothers me too much last time.

My boy friend says this is the only way out for us. My parents are very strict and probably would go to court. Do you think you can help me? I want to know if you are young to get married? What can we possibly do? This whole thing is getting me emotionally upset.—D.Y.

Dear D.Y.: Your boy friend sounds like nothing. I don't foresee much of a future marriage to him.

One wonders which of you is victimizing the other. Or is it a case of two uncontrolled mixed-up persons dragging each other down?

Are you the grabby opportunist, essentially indifferent to your welfare, heedlessly exploiting your vulnerable adolescent sex appetite without concern for the penalties to you?

Wielding the girl of your testimony, I would say:

1. Your conscience strikes in reaction to the earlier self-induced miscarriage, and you are present dispositive to go through with the second pregnancy, are you strongly inclined to a responsible person, and to feel morally accountable for what you do.

2. By contrast, your boy friend makes a poor showing. His insistence upon a "way out," that keeps him in the clear while putting you on the spot, to suffer the physical risk, psychological damage and moral condemnation that are the going price of abortion (or its equivalent).

3. His conservative attitude suggests that he is a rather bad guy. He brings some years your senior adds to that impression, regardless of how old they may be in terms of years.

4. No telling! If you and he are seriously intent to marry eventually, and if he is expected to be lovers meanwhile, then in the name of common sense, get that marriage license, and go to whatever consequences befall. That is the course of integrity.

5. Your conscience balks at precipitating another miscarriage, is so to your credit. And my advice is, heed your conscience and have the baby, despite your friend's objections, by doing exercises, etc., to cooperate magnanimously in responsible action.

6. Now for a specific guideline: Apply for the Salvator Army, Service to Unmarried Parents, 400 West Street, New York 11, N.Y. Telephone: Chelsea 3-7070.

The checker for this service is "to protect the well being and rights of the child born out of wedlock of his parents, to make sure their current needs are met, and to help them to achieve a more stable, financially acceptable way of life."

Christmas Pagan Festival Student Editorial Calls

WATERLOO, Ont. (CP)—An editorial in the University of Waterloo student newspaper describes Christmas as a pagan festival where the merchants make a killing and the little more than a pagan festival.

The editorial in the Collegian, written by contributing writer John Macdonald, suggests that Soerates as well as Christ did not survive.

Why is such a fuss made over Christ's birthday? the editorial asks.

"He's supposed to be a great man that he died on the cross for us. But Soerates died for the sake of truth which is fundamental to all of us. In other words, he died for us also. Why don't we celebrate his birthday?"

The editorial says "pressure groups" are responsible for not celebrating Soerates' birthday.

It adds: "The church is a greater pressure group than the philosophers so the church gets its way."

The editorial suggests that at Christmas more people get "conned into going to church."

Tourist Figures Given For C.B.

SVINNEY (CP)—Evan Lloyd, director of the Cape Breton Tourist Association said Monday 38,019 cars from outside Nova Scotia visited the island in 1963.

He said the cars brought $17,000,000 in Cape Breton.

Mr. Alec spoke of Thomas as one who had "behaved very badly, but after reading about him I am clearly sympathetic with him."
