REPORT ON THE LORNE HIGHLAND WHISKY:
"We have visited the bottling stores of Greenlees Brothers, and have selected from the vats, samples of their Lorne Highland Whisky, and have subjected them to careful examination and analysis.
The samples were very fragrant, mellow, and of pleasant flavor, and possessed all the characteristics of pure and well-matured Scotch Whisky of the first quality."

BAD NEWS FROM COLORADO.
Death and Destruction.
TERRIBLE AVALANCHE.
No part of the world appears to be exempt from disasters and misfortunes. Ohio has its floods, the Northwest its blizzards, England her storms on the seas, Moscow her frosts and Colorado her snow-slides.
Never, within the memory of the oldest inhabitant, have snow slides been so numerous and destructive to life and property as in 1883. Late Colorado papers bring us dreadful intelligence of the work of the avalanche. We take the following from the Gunnison News Democrat:—

"Again, Ruby Camp has been visited by a snow slide, and this last was even more disastrous than any which has preceded it. It started from the summit of Ruby peak, at the head of Ruby basin.
From where the snow started to where the slide stopped in the bottom of the gulch, it fully two miles, and in the widest place the slide covered a strip of country nearly three-quarters of a mile in extent. The whole of the south-eastern slope of Ruby peak, from the summit down almost to the Hopewell mine, was swept bare of everything. Great boulders, weighing hundreds of tons, were carried down with resistless force; large trees were snapped off like pipe-stems by the moving mountain of snow, and buildings were knocked into ruins and the logs and lumber scattered over the gulch. In the course of the moving avalanche lay the Durango, Old Mexico, Old Shelk, Howard Extension, Oakes and Ruby Chief mines, and buildings on all these properties were carried away, causing a loss of from twenty to twenty-five thousand dollars, including the engines, boilers and other machinery on the Ruby Chief mine, which are supposed to be totally wrecked, and the whole side of the mountain is one scene of ruin and desolation.

Scott and Coleman were asleep in the Durango camp house when the slide struck them, and shaft house, camp house and all were carried down the hill and scattered generally. Coleman showed most wonderful nerve. In being carried down the hill he had his collar-bone broken, but when he stopped he was lying on top of the snow instead of being buried in it as was his companion. He was stunned and bruised, but even then, with his broken shoulder and no clothing but his night shirt, he went to work and succeeded in digging his companion out of the snow and saved his life.
Scott was completely buried except his foot, and the snow was packed like ice around him. As it was, both men would certainly have perished had not Mahoney and Lee come to their assistance.

Brown and Lenander fared still worse.
They were asleep in their cabin when the slide struck them, crushing in the side of the building and killing Lenander almost instantly. Mr. Brown was not hurt very much, but his condition for nine long hours was terrible. He lay there unable to move anything but his head, and that very little.
Lenander was lying dead across his breast and on top of both was at least ten feet of closely packed snow. Under the circumstances Brown's escape was little less than a miracle.

ANOTHER SLIDE.
It was only on Saturday evening last that Michael Lawler, of Irwin, lost his life and now another fatal case is reported from the Sheep mountain region. The latest victim is Mr. J. W. Goodspeed, superintendent of the Paradise Gulch Mining company, and a gentleman well known in all part of the county. Last Thursday week he left Gothic and started over the mountains to visit the mines in Paradise gulch. He stopped at Richardson's cabin that night and left the next day, expecting to reach the mine where his men were at work before night. When half-way between Richardson's and the mine, and when in plain sight of the latter, he was caught in a snow slide and hurled down the mountain side to certain death. The indications are that the body is covered at least one hundred feet under the snow and will not be found until the snow melts in the spring.

CAUGHT IN SNOW SLIDES.
The Silver Record says:—At Breckenridge Jan. 29, Fred Plant, a miner employed on Red Peak while attempting to walk down the mountain, was overtaken by a snow slide and instantly killed. His body was not recovered.

Sweet's pack train this side of the Yankee Girl mine near Silverton, Jan. 31, was caught in a snow slide and two men and twenty mules buried out of sight. James Barr and a couple of mules were rescued from under eight feet of snow after hours of labor.

Near Silverton, at Burros bridge, five men had narrow escapes from a snow slide.

THE LUONA MINE.
The miners employed in running the tunnel to cut the Luona vein have had lots of experience with snow slides. Two gangs of men are at work, one set of men quitting work at 5 p. m., the next going out at 6 o'clock. A short time since, when the night shift went up to work they found everything covered with a snow slide that had come down while all were at supper.
All the force were put to work and a tunnel sixty feet long was run through the snow to reach the tunnel and their work. A few days later another slide came down and caught two men at work, completely closing the mouth of the tunnel. The boys had to dig twenty feet, carrying the snow back into the tunnel. This last experience completely demoralized the boys and they concluded to quit work until the danger of slides are passed.

ANOTHER SNOW SLIDE.
Gothic also comes to the front with a report of a big snow slide which happened that camp on Monday night, although fortunately without causing loss of life or doing any damage. The slide started near the top of Gothic mountain, opposite the town, and came thundering down with such force that every building in the town across the gulch was shaken as if by an earthquake. Gothic mountain is very high and very steep on that side and the moving mass of snow tore all before it. The sound of the moving, crushing mass was like thunder, and when the slide was over great heaps of snow, trees, rocks and dirt lay piled up hundreds of feet deep in the gulch below. Happily there was no one living on that side of the gulch, and consequently no damage was done.

DEATH AND DESTRUCTION.
To the long list of snow slides, another must be added, which, in its results, proved more disastrous than any which had preceded it. This last occurred at the Anthracite Mesa coal mines, on the north side of State river, four miles above Crested Butte. The slide itself was almost insignificant in size, not being over twenty or thirty yards wide and only having started from fifty to sixty yards above where it was stopped by coming in contact with the boarding house connected with the mine.
The snow was about five feet deep where the slide took place and it seems almost incredible that so much damage could have been done. The slide hit above the building was very steep, however, and the slide must have come with terrible force.

The slide occurred between two and three o'clock Wednesday morning, but the news did not reach Crested Butte until fully five hours later. The moving mass of snow came down the mountain side striking the mine boarding house, a new two-story frame building twenty fifty feet in size.
The slide was broken by the building and went no further, but the sides of the building were crushed in, the building was tipped over upon its side and the roof was knocked off, broken into several pieces and sent further down the hill. In this building at the time were forty-nine men and one woman, and these awoke to find themselves in the midst of a confused mass of broken beams, lumber and snow.

Near by stood a log house and a small and large tent, and these were all uninjured and their inmates at once came to the rescue of their less fortunate comrades.
The night was a terrible one, the snow falling in blinding sheets and being taken up by the wind and hurled into the faces of those who ventured out. Notwithstanding the storm, however, the men worked valiantly and succeeded in liberating the imprisoned unfortunates from beneath the ruin. As the people were taken out they were dressed only in their night-clothes and suffered terribly from cold and exposure.

When the News-Democrat representative reached the scene the bodies had all been recovered and the remains of the six dead men were found laid out in a row in one end of the big tent, while the other end of the tent had been rigged up as a temporary hospital with beds on either side filled with injured men. A small room in the end of the log house was also filled with bunks for the care of those most seriously injured.
The men recovered from the wreck were almost totally without clothing, and the workmen kept bringing in such articles of wearing apparel as were found from time to time.

Physicians and clergymen, by reason of the privileges accorded them, are frequently placed in delicate relationships with their female patients and members of their flock.
And while any violation of the trust imposed on them should meet with the severest punishment, the designing woman who, to exact blackmail, brings false charges against her doctor or her pastor should not be allowed lightly to escape. The case of Rev. Mr. Beattie, of Brantford, is familiar; but a more painful case, inasmuch as it occasioned the accused man to commit suicide, comes from England. Dr. Edwards, a young physician of excellent reputation, purchased in 1881 a share in the medical practice of Dr. Whitmarsh, at Hounslow, paying $9,000 for it. The practice not being worth what it was represented, a dispute arose between the partners, and at this juncture a Mrs. Bignell accused Dr.
Edwards of having abused her confidence, and taken improper liberties with her. Dr.
Whitmarsh professed to credit the story, instructing his solicitor to take steps to dissolve the partnership, and Dr. Edwards, finding himself involved in a tangled web of calumny and treachery, took the coward's refuge in the suicide's grave. It has since transpired that the woman had no foundation for her charge, and that she was in all probability urged to make it by Dr. Whitmarsh. The story is a painful one, and shows with what caution, and only upon the very best of proof, should stories affecting the moral conduct of doctors and clergymen be received.

CORRESPONDENCE.
We do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions or statements of our correspondents.

Denial.
To the Editor of the Examiner.
DEAR SIR,—I noticed a correspondent signed "Sub-Official" in your issue of 2nd February, accusing me erroneously of writing to the Patriot of Jan. 4th, accusing him of ignorance, etc. I hereby repudiate the claim of having anything to do with the letter in question. I have a high regard for that gentleman, and think him highly competent, and capable of fulfilling any office under his charge, and would be glad if an opportunity would occur to promote him to a higher position. The gentlemen mentioned in the letter I have supported at their last campaign, and will do so again if the opportunity presents itself. Hoping that this will be sufficient guarantee to convince "Sub-Official" that I am not the author of that letter, you will please, in justice to me give this a publication soon, and oblige, Yours truly,
JOHN A. CAMERON.
