ADAM BEDE.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

"It's an errand to you brought me, Dinah," said Adam, apparently unconscious that he was holding her hand all the while; mother's a bit ailing, and she's set her heart on your coming to stay the night with her, if you'll be so kind. I told her I'd call and ask you as I came from the village. She over-works herself, and I can't persuade her to have a little girl to help her. I don't know what's to be done."

Adam released Dinah's hand as he ceased speaking, and was expecting an answer, but before she had opened her lips, Mrs.
Poyser said,

"Look there now! I told you there were folks enow't help if this parish without going farther off. There's Mrs. Bede getting as old and cas'alty as can be, and she won't let any b'ody go a-nigh her hardly.
The folks at Snowfield have learned by this time to do better w'out you nor she can."

"I'll put my bonnet on and set off directly, if you don't want anything done first, aunt," said Dinah, folding up her work.

"Yes, I do want something done. I want you to have your tea, child; it's all ready; and you'll have a cup, Adam, if y' arena in too big a hurry."

"Yes, I'll have a cup, please; and then I'll walk with Dinah. I'm going straight home, for I've got a lot o' timber valuations to write out."

"Why, Adam, lad, are you here?" said Mr. Poyser, entering, warm and coatless, with the two black-eyed boys behind him, still looking as much like him as two small elephants are like a large one. "How is it we've got sight o' you so long before foddering-time?"

"I came on an errand for mother," said Adam. "She's got a touch of her old complaint, and she wants Dinah to go and stay with her a bit."

"Well, we'll spare her for your mother a little while," said Mr. Poyser. "But we won't spare her for anybody else, only her husband."

"Husband!" said Marty, who was at the most prosaic and literal period of the boyish mind, "why, Dinah hasn't got a husband?"

"Spare her," said Mrs. Poyser, placing a seed-cake on the table, and then seating herself to pour out the tea. "But we must spare her, it seems, and not for a husband neither, but for her own megrims. Tommy what are you doing to your little sister's doll? making the child naughty, when she'd be good if you'd let her. You shauna have a morsel o' cake if you behave so."

Tommy, with true brotherly sympathy, was amusing himself by turning Dolly's skirt over her bald head, and exhibiting her truncated body to the general scorn—an indignity which cut Totty to the heart.

"What do you think Dinah's been telling me since dinner-time?" Mrs. Poyser continued, looking at her husband.

"Oh! I'm a poor 'un at guessing," said Mr. Poyser.

"Why she means to go back to Snowfield again, and work i' the mill, and starve herself, as she used to do, like a creature as has got no friends."

Mr. Poyser did not readily find words to express his unpleasant astonishment; he only looked from his wife to Dinah, who had now seated herself beside Totty, as a bulwark against brotherly playfulness, and was busying herself with the children's tea.

If he had been given to making general reflections, it would have occurred to him that there was certainly a change come over Dinah, for she never used to change color; but, as it was, he merely observed that her face was flushed at that moment.

Mr. Poyser thought she looked the prettier for it; it was a flush no deeper than the petal of a monthly rose. Perhaps it was because her uncle was looking at her so fixedly, but there is no knowing; for just then Adam was saying, with quiet surprise:

"Why, I thought she'd given up the notion o' going back to her old country."

"Thought I yis!" said Mrs. Poyser; 'and so 'ould anybody else ha' thought as 'ad got their right end upside. But I suppose you must be a Methodist to know what a Methodist 'ull do."

"It's ill guessing what the bats are flying after."

"Why, what have we done to you, Dinah, as you must go away from us?" said Mr.
Poyser, still pausing over his tea-cup.

"It's like breaking your word, welly; for your aunt never had no thought but you'd make this your home."

"Nay, uncle," said Dinah, trying to be quite calm. "When I first came I said it was only for a time, as long as I could be of any comfort to my aunt."

"Well, an' who said you'd ever left off being a comfort to me?" said Mrs. Poyser.

"If you didna mean to stay w' me, you'd better never ha' come. Them as ha' never had a cushion don't miss it."

"Nay, nay," said Mr. Poy
