ELLEN'S DIARY

Current Events Are Lost Topics During Seeding

What demanding days these are on Island farms. And excitingly new. At Alderlea there is now little time left to repine. And it would be, to say the least, considered a digression, if one of the housewives were to be discovered now seated at some piece of idle sewing, like making herself a dress. Or reading a magazine or book! Not that words would spill. Expressions on faces would be beyond that. They would register a sadness, a dejection near to despair, to think that their chosen ones were showing so little interest, in the affairs of the cropping without.

"See!" we exclaimed to James at breakfast when we noticed Papa Starling alight on a branch of the white birch by the gateway. There was a shrill call - an SOS. And Papa - to be Robin flew in instantly to assert his claim to this neighborhood, where his spouse instinctively had crouched low on the warm blue eggs in the nest.

"What is it, Ellen?" James inquired starting up from his chair.

"It's that starling" we said. "He's bent on making trouble with the robins. It's no use, we'll have to let the boys do some shooting."

"Oh" he said, sinking back relieved. "The starling. Well, don't start anything at present, Ellen. Wait until the cropping is done. We've got about all that we can handle now as it is!"

A load of fertilizer comes in the yard goes up the farm-lane to a field. We know it is being presently spread. Grain comes from the cleaning and is moved to this and that piece and patch of the name, for the cropping is a family endeavour. And somewhere, sowing is being done. Some is being done with the tractor and old seeder, but as well by tractor and machine. With a happy sound, a tractor comes to the yard to re-fuel. Its sound ceases for a few minutes while the gas-pump takes up the refrain. Then in no time, that quiet prevails which tells us that machine and operator are off again to some field.

Mealtimes are more exact now, the time spent over them brief. No time to chat now of current events — of pleasant "frivolities" such as June birthdays, of babes' arrivals, of showers and approaching weddings, subjects all so dear to the heart of womenkind. In the broader field, bi - culturalism, bi - lingualism, or which flag or flag - design is being chosen are for the time lost topics, while the farm puts its own first things first, and in its own good - night....

Beef Steaks Pre-Cooked Cut Preparation Time

BECAUSE the service is chic, the foods interesting and appetizing, foreign entrees are often listed on the Royal Ambassador menus.

"Par exemple," said our Chef, "whenever tournedos are served, they're in the lead, Madame, because they are bascd on filet of beef, a form of steak enjoyed by all nationalities."

"Most homemakers hesitate to prepare a last-minute entree because it keeps them in the kitchen after the guests arrive," I remarked.

"It is not generally known that all last - minute meals can be partly prepared in advance, wrapped in foil, frozen, and still remain succulent when properly reheated."

BEEF STEAK

The steaks are precooked to rare and placed on heat - proof platters or trays with half-cooked frozen vegetables. Top with foil and freeze.

Thaw 10 min. 200 degrees F. oven. Then remove foil, raise temperature to 350 degrees F. for thin steak, 400 degrees F. if thick, and continue to cook to desired doneness.

The same method can be used for half - broiled chicken, Cornish game hens, lamb, veal or pork chops or thick slices of ham. Fish may be cooked in the same way.

If dinner starts with hors d'oeuvres and cocktails, or fruit or vegetable juices, or salads, they are chilled in the refrigerator. Dessert is waiting in the refrigerator or freezer; coffee is dripping.

Any homemaker should be able to produce such a dinner with ease and without a spot on her apron.

This efficiency is only achieved by practice.

The housewife will benefit by practice not only in finishing or preparing foods and assembling the trays, but in starting with the kitchen in order and disposing of waste and soiled utensils as soon as used.

All dishes used aboard an aircraft are automatically washed in the commissaries in water at 136 degrees F. and rinsed with almost boiling water at 186 degrees F., which leaves them germ - free and gleaming clean.

Stack The Dishes

If at home you do not have an automatic dishwasher, scrape and stack the dishes, wash with a good detergent, using a brush, stack in dish drainers, scald with boiling water, cover with a clean cloth and leave to steam - dry.

Banish the dish-towels!

ACCOLADE FROM THE CHEF

Because of their expert training, TWA hostesses make wonderful wives. They're lovely to look at, in excellent health, even - tempered, efficient, highly trained in duties comparable to those of home hostesses: fine food preparation, cooking and the art of helping people feel comfortable and happy.

For these hostesses to retire is not compulsory, even if married, unless they cannot meet the high standards of good health required.

The payoff? Among the hundreds who marry and stay on the job, carrying on the two careers of hostessing and homemaking, the divorce rate is less than 1 per cent!

MARY HAWORTH

Young Wife Finds Lack Of Romance In Her Life

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My husband and I have been married only a few years, and although we have a good marriage, something is missing.

Both of us wanted to marry and we found each other pleasing to be with, but there was never any deep love or tenderness.

Most of my husband's men friends are bachelors, young and handsome. When they are with their girls, they and the girls seen to share something that my husband and I never did.

When we were first married I knew our love was not complete, but still I wanted to be his wife. Today I am not satisfied. I want to fall head over heels in love. Wha should I do?

L.L.

DEAR L.L.: I notice you didn't say you want to fall head over heels in love with somebody but only "head over heels in love." That's about the size of it.

Being head over heels in love is a vastly different experience (definitely more immature and unrealistic) than feeling genuine love of another person.

Real love wills the good of the person loved. As someone has said, "Love is the desire to give fullness of life." Also love has been defined as that state in which satisfaction and security of another person has become as important to one's sense of well being as one's own satisfaction and security are.

Being "in love" is mostly a matter of being infatuated with a dream-image and (as the psychologists say) projecting that image at an associate, identifying him or her with it—assuming him or her to be the "dream person"—when in all probability he or she bears little correspondence to it, actually.

It is easier to be "in love" in the unmarried state than in the married state. In marriage, persons tend to become known to one another as they are, with their virtues and failings unconcealable. Thus the "dream image" quickly vanishes. Whereupon if genuine love isn't present, based on real recognition, and manifesting in reciprocal kindness, sympathy, appreciative fondness and the like, the relationship seems awkward, meaningless and untenable (or worse).

I would suppose that the air of suspense, elation, excitement, intense physical awareness, etc., that you observe and envy in the dating relationship of bachelors and their girl friends, is a by-product of infatuation, which has to do with illusion, slight acquaintance, unsatisfied sex hunger and so on.

As for what to do, try to grow up psychologically (or mentally and emotionally), commensurate with your calendar age. Read "The Enemies of Love" (Kenedy publishers) by Dom Aelred Watkin, also "Life Together" (Sheed and Ward) by Wingfield Hope, as direction finders in forging ahead towards maturity in the marriage you have

M.H.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: How can I manage, in a nice polite way, to let my daughter's boy friend know it is time to go home? He brings her in from a late date and lingers on for an hour or two. This disturbs me, as she has to get ready for school next day. Please advise.

D.Y.

DEAR D.Y.: The answer is so simple, so obvious, that I can't imagine why it hasn't occurred to you spontaneously. In short, the civilized way to let your daughter's boy friend know it is time to go is just to tell him so, firmly, in those very words. Indeed I suspect he is rather surprised that you haven't done so, long before now.
