

appreciate something that they usually take for granted. Let's hop[e Ziegler and his cronies catch on quickly.

So when the playoffs start (I am pretty confident we will have a Stanley Cup winner to praise at the end of the NHL's 75th anniversary), think of me sitting on front of my t.v. with my notebook. I will be there regardless of when they start.

Hey. Even if there are no playoffs, it is almost time to make the great shifts from CBC to ATV, from Canadian to Blue, and from hockey to baseball. But if the baseball players go on strike or get locked out, contact me somehow and we will get together for a rousing game of lawn-bowling, or cricket, or soccer-baseball, or street hockey, or racketball, or squash, or There will always be sports.

And yes, there will always be hockey.

Wheel Chair Basketball Tournament

by Chris McCarron

From April 2-4 1992, UPEI held an invitational wheelchair basketball tournament. Seven teams from across Canada participated. It was my first time watching a live wheelchair basketball game and it was great. I watched the Edmonton City Gold defeat the Montreal Gladiators. The people in the stands seem to enjoy the game. Peter MacKinnon from the basketball Panthers said, "I would like to try wheelchair basketball sometime." I agree with Peter but I feel that it would take me a long time before I could master the skills needed to play the game. Anyway the Toronto Spitfire Commandos won the gold medal, Edmonton City Gold won silver, and the Montreal Gladiators earned a bronze medal.
