BAHA'I CONVENTION

VANCOUVER—April 29—Canadian members of the Baha'i faith, meeting in their fourth annual convention here April 27-29, learned that the first International Baha'i Council had been formed early this year. The announcement was made by John A. Robarts, Toronto, convention chairman.

"This council," said Robarts, "will become the supreme administrative body for the Baha'i faith, which numbers about three million members throughout the world."

Principal speaker at the convention, Emeric Sala, Montreal business man, said, "One of the most important things to remember in seeking a solution to the world's confusion is that the world is really one large country and mankind its citizens. The countries of the world today," he continued, "are economically interdependent and the United Nations and other organizations are preparing us for some form of world citizenship."

Some 150 members of the Canadian Baha'i community from most provinces attended the convention. National secretary, Mrs. Laura Davis, Toronto, reported increased membership while others reported greater activity among Baha'i groups throughout Canada.

Elected to the National Spiritual Assembly, governing body of Baha'is in Canada, were John A. Robarts, Toronto, Ont.; Emeric Sala, St. Lambert, Que.; Mrs. Rosemary Sala, St. Lambert, Que.; Mrs. Laura Davis, Toronto, Ont.; S. Scopflocher, Montreal, Que.; Rowland Estall, Montreal, Que.; Lloyd Gardner, Toronto, Ont.; Miss Mae McKenna, Vancouver, B. C.; Miss Winnifred Harvey, Ottawa, Ont.

A religious faith founded in Persia 100 years ago, Baha'i calls for a wider loyalty than national patriotism. It is based on the beliefs that all religions are in reality one and that mankind is essentially one large family.
