

CRIMEAN HEROES.—It is gratifying to find, that England has not forgotten the services of her brave army in the Crimea. Men of all ranks who distinguished themselves by their bravery and gallant conduct, are receiving their reward. The services of the non-commissioned officers and soldiers richly deserve to be recorded and known, and we have great pleasure in publishing the following interesting notices in the Times in their services receive honourable mention.

Before Parliament rises, there is one publication to which we would gladly call the attention of all our readers, and which we think would be a very valuable present by the Queen's command to both Houses, we shall stand acquitted of any tendency to exult in our interested motives. This "Paper" contains the names of the non-commissioned officers and soldiers who have been selected for recommendation to the Emperor of the French to receive the French military war medal. As many persons as desire to mitigate the feelings of grief which they have experienced in perusing the proceedings of the Chelsea board would well to turn to this proud bead-roll of heroic achievement. Here we have the names of the men who did the deeds which have so long been called leaders looked on and left the army to its fate. Nor must it be taken as any reflection upon the courage of the many thousand gallant soldiers whose names are necessarily unrecorded and unremembered of this kind. The praise of distinguished valour could only be assigned to those who had conspicuous opportunity for its display. It was impossible to lay before the Government the names of all the individuals in a Regiment who may have distinguished themselves by peculiar gallantry in the field or by extraordinary endurance under the extremities of human suffering. These few words are, in fact, the only means by which we can do justice among the many stout soldiers whose deserts were great, but for whose names a place could here be found. We should add that these are the names of the living—no dead. There is not a name that did for the men who toiled up the hill at the Alma, for those who saved the allied armies from destruction upon the terrible storm of the 25th of September, 1854. Of the living, we will now give a few names—we can do no more, for they occupy 34 closely printed pages of a Parliamentary paper.

Sergeant Seth Bond, of the 11th Hussars, served in the Bulgarian campaign of 1853. He bore his part in the affair of Boulgank and in the battles of the Alma, Balaklava, and Inkermann—that is to say, in all the principal actions in which a cavalry soldier could bear a part throughout the war. At the Alma, when ordered to pursue and capture prisoners, he exhibited great subordination in acting (at the suggestion of a Staff officer) in the capture of a Russian gun; and also at the action of Balaklava his coolness and gallantry were noticed. Might not Colonel Peel have found a better word than "subordination" to characterize the action?—a man who could do that did himself was not likely to act inhumanly even to an enemy who had wounded him. Sergeant Seth Bond, of the 11th Hussars, served in the whole campaign from 1854 to 1855. On the 25th of September, 1854, he was present at the battles of the Alma, Balaklava, Inkermann, the Tchernaya, and throughout the siege of Sebastopol. On the 25th of September, 1854, his company jumped into the river Belik, and succeeded in saving the life of a British soldier, who would have been drowned but by the timely assistance rendered by Driver Smeaton. Here is a pretty little incident of Ganner and Driver John Marble, of the same regiment. On the 18th of June, during the storming of the Redan, Ganner Glass left the advanced trenches of the right attack with a few men, and advanced toward the Redan. On getting to the Redan, he was nearly smothered in three places. Ganner M'Arble crept out of the trenches on his hands and knees, managed to get Ganner Glass on his back, and brought him back into the trenches. A bombardment at Sebastopol was severely wounded in the legs by the bursting of a shell. This untoward incident, however does, not seem to have slackened the zeal of the gallant Bombardier. We find him serving in the Crimea in April and subsequent bombardments. "At the explosion of the French gun-park, he was the first to volunteer to carry away a number of live shells and cartridges." This article should consist of courage and devotion, that we are utter of at a loss to establish any principle of selection. We find that Colour-Sergeant Charles Sargent, of the Grenadier Guards, embarked for the Crimea in February, 1854, and served throughout the whole campaign without intermission. No urgent private affairs claimed the presence of the worthy Colour-Sergeant in England. He served the battles of the Alma, Balaklava, and Inkermann, where he was wounded, and was present throughout the siege and at the capture of Sebastopol. This is to say a good deal in a very few words. We find that the Colour-Sergeant Colman, returned in health and strength to England, and is at this moment resting happily from the toils of war.

Privates Philip Bails and Charles Turry joined the 4th Battalion of the Coldstream in Turkey, in July, 1854. They were actively engaged at the Alma and Inkermann, and did duty in the trenches without any intermission throughout the siege. Corporal Joseph Connor, of the 50th Foot, was particularly distinguished himself at the Alma, continuing to fire on the enemy after being severely wounded. Corporal Horsfield, and Privates Daniel Burnand and James Taylor, of the 1st Royal Regiment, were also active for continual faithful service in the trenches during the whole of the siege operations. John Clarkson, of the 4th (King's Own) Regiment, was at head quarters during the Siege of the Redan, and was active in the performance of his duties in the trenches; twice wounded,—viz., on the 14th of April and 23rd June, 1854. A short note tells us, that on the 26th of September, 1854, the 1st (Royal Fusiliers) Regiment landed in the Crimea on the 14th of September with his Regiment, and remained with it until the war was at an end. Here is a note of this brave soldier who served in the Crimea at the Alma and brought the Company out of action; engaged with the enemy on the 29th of October, 1854 also being on the 5th of November, 1854, and Inkermann on the 25th of September, at the taking of the Quarries and both the assaults on the Redan; never absent from his Regiment. We can only regret, that considerations of space forbid us to extract more names and notes from this glorious record.

The Parliamentary document is as interesting as any novel or romance, and has the merit, moreover, of containing fresh and valuable information. The names should be given to it, in order that the brave men whose names are mentioned, and whose achievements are so briefly summed up in it, should feel that their names are not forgotten, and do not perish from the memory of their countrymen. In remarks of this kind, we can do nothing more than take the regiments in order as they are set down, and pick a few names from the list, in order to bring the names of the most distinguished, with the services of all are so eminent, but in order to call public attention to the existence of the list. The publication of such a list will be the greatest boon to the soldier. We admit that it is a good and desirable, every soldier actively engaged in a victorious conflict with the enemy should receive some mark of his presence in the conflict. Nothing, however, would excite greater emulation among the soldiers than the knowledge that those among them who showed themselves most conspicuous for courage and fortitude would also be most distinguished by the admiration of their country.

At St. Thomas, on the 31st July, the Cholera was raging violently, and proving fatal to many. At Crab Island, the sickness was equally bad. A heavy cargo of the carbolic was experienced at Antigua on the 20th July.

THE STORY-TELLER OF STAMBOUL.

In the reign of Sultan Murad IV., there was among the familiars of his capital a worthy and venerable book-merchant named Schemeddin. He occupied one of the principal stalls in the book-stall of the bazaar, and was a literary world in Stamboul. It is true, this did not imply a very large circle of acquaintance, for there were not many persons who inclined to such a pursuit, and he was not very conversant with the knowledge between them all. He knew Schemeddin, and often visited his repository. His deal largely consisted in the purchase and sale of Arabic thespians, in which were chronicled the opinions of distinguished lawyers and eadns upon the various points of law, and the works of the Turkish and Arabian poets and romancers, the songs of Abou Toman and Hafiz. The wild legend of Antar, and the Thousand and one nights, were also to be seen, containing choice specimens of the literature of other languages, classic and modern. This was carefully watched from the public gaze, and reserved for the few whose love of learning rendered them less bigoted than the majority of their faith, who would smother the recension of the true belief to the writings of the Prophet. Schemeddin could the latter have passed the stall of Schemeddin without finding him in learned conversation with some of the learned or grey-headed aad, deep in questions concerning law, divinity, or art. Nor would he object, though it might be a little out of the way, to see Frank and the infidel, particularly if he approved himself a man of learning; for Schemeddin, though more devoted to Musalmanism, approached in his heart some distance from the orthodox common knowledge makes men free of a common guild, and that the learned are brothers all the world over. Schemeddin was a man of nearly the whole of his life, seldom going from his place of business, till years had come upon him, when he would smother the recension of the old parchment upon his stall; and since business in which he was engaged yielded a moderate amount of profit, he hoped, by the blessing of Allah, to be able to retire to a cozy place in the bezestan, until the predetermined day should come, and he should be able to give up the trade of a book-merchant. But every man has his lot of trouble; and even the quiet life of the book-merchant was not quite untroubled. Schemeddin was, in an only son, named Selim; and in every respect he was the heir of the book-stall was the opposite to his father's wishes. This father was a man of peace, and contented with a moderate and regular income; but Selim, who was fond of quiet and regulars, Selim was as wild and impetuous as a storm, and his insatiable fondness for money, Selim got to spend it with a reckless hand. His father had a son, but he was a weak and impulsive disposition, and he was not a man of a strong moral agency. Selim had to read for a part of each day from some book upon Turkish literature, and he was not a man of a strong moral agency. Selim had to read for a part of each day from some book upon Turkish literature, and he was not a man of a strong moral agency.

strong and vigorous, to grow where it is sown. Selim bent to the ground before his father, and kissed the hem of his robe. "I have this day made my will," pursued the man. "I have intrusted it to the care of my son Selim, and I have given to him the property, and I have charged him to see it strictly fulfilled. If thou reformest thy life, and passant the course I have traced, then, thou wilt receive at my death the whole of my property; but if thou continuest wild and reckless as thou hast been hitherto, thou shalt be disinherited, and thy portion shall be given to the poor. Arise, my son; thou hast heard my will; may Allah give thee grace to obey it." For more than a year after this time, Selim laboured hard to fulfil the wishes of his father; but he could not find any company into which he had fallen; he undertook no business, and he was disagreeable to him, and became the model of a dull son; he endeavoured, moreover, to repress the love of food which had distinguished him, though not with very signal success. At times the pent-up steam would burst forth, and frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling outbursts, Selim's conduct was most exemplary, and he was a model of a dutiful son in his father. Yet it was not altogether the prospect of the wealth which induced him to this diligence; he was a man of a strong moral agency, and he had a share in it, for Selim had many good qualities as the foundation of his character. Selim's moral agency was accomplished, and he was gathered to his fathers. The old book-dealer was missed from his seat among his literary wares, and his wonted customers were disappointed and greatly grieved by the loss of so much learning. The bezestan seemed to lack its most accustomed presence, and the frequently at the expense of his father's friends, the Mollah Hassan, the arbiter of his fortune, not excepted; but, setting aside these trifling