The bidding:

|---|---|---|---|

| Pass | 3♠ | Pass | 4♠ |

Opening lead—three of clubs.

A contract made as the result of a defender's error counts just as much on the score as one made on sheer merit.

The declarer who neglects to provide the opposition with the maximum chance to go wrong in the defense is guilty of an error of omission which may be just as destructive as an error of commission.

Suppose you're playing a contract of four spades and a club is opened and continued. What is the most promising line of play to make the hand?

Of course, you ruff the second club, but what next? The best play is to lead a heart to the ace, and let's assume both defenders play small. Then a low spade to the ace and another back to the king.

Now a heart is played from dummy and East wins with the queen. What can he return to defeat you? Nothing. The contract is made because he must either lead a club, on which you discard a heart loser as the club is trumped in dummy, or a diamond into dummy's A-Q.

What's so extraordinary about this hand? Nothing, really. East got caught in an endplay, but endplays today are a dime a dozen and don't call for special comment.

The point to the hand is the early heart play to the ace. If East had been smart enough to drop his queen on the ace, nothing could have saved us from defeat. But how many players do you know who would have parted with the queen of hearts right then and there?

If declarer, after ruffing the club, first takes two rounds of trumps and then tries the play of the ace and another heart, it would become much easier for East to unload the queen on the ace. He could hardly fail to notice he was about to run into an endplay with the queen of hearts and might therefore decide to get rid of it on the ace. The idea is to catch East off guard before he sees what's coming.
