OYSTER FIELD DAY HELD AT ELLERSLIE

Valuable Information Given As Interesting Program Carried Out.

The fourth annual field day sponsored by the Oyster Growers Association and Fisheries Research Board was held yesterday at the Biological Station at Ellerslie and was attended by visitors from all over the Province and many from the U. S. A. Demonstrations showing the various stages of Oyster cultivation were on view and proved of much interest to visitors; boats were available and many people took advantage of them to visit the actual scene of oyster farming down the river. The ladies of the surrounding church served meals during the day and an excellent program of sports was enjoyed by young and old alike.

Mr. Brenton Clark, Linkletter, president of the Association and the directors were there and assisted Dr. A. W. H. Needler who is in charge of the Biological Station at Ellerslie welcomed the guests and explained the various exhibits on view.

Serious Oyster Enemy

A new feature this year, said Dr. Needler, was the exhibit of the oyster drill, which is a serious enemy of the oyster and has been found in the Northumberland Strait, but not in the North Shore. For this reason it is very important that material from the Straits be prohibited in North Shore areas. The drill is very harmful and is like a small snail which burrows into the oyster. Another new discovery was the use of lime for killing star fish. Another feature of the Malpeque oyster industry is the oyster in its resisting disease. The Malpeque Oyster is surviving almost a 100 percent in the Embore River where the oyster is to that river had only survived 20 percent in view of the Malpeque oyster presents the best prospect for reestablishing the Charlottetown inlets.

Mr. Brenton Clark spoke briefly and introduced Mr. A. E. Fortington said the oysters in the Malpeque area were increasing in numbers to such a gratifying extent that it is now possible to stock larger markets. The Association is alive to the need for expanding markets and had been able to have as their guest speaker this afternoon, Mr. A. E. Fortington of the Department of Trade and Commerce, at Ottawa, and chief of the animal products and fish export division.

Federal Official Speaks

Mr. Fortington expressed his pleasure in being present and was delighted to hear of the increased production of the oyster in these waters. He had visited the Oyster Beds and was much interested in what he saw. He was sure the Malpeque oyster was one of the finest in quality and flavor that could be found.

In going after oyster markets and particularly the British market, Mr. Fortington emphasized the point that buying firms in London have been established for centuries and they know their business and know their requirements and insist on their requirements being fulfilled. The main factor in supplying the most important market is the oyster. The British market is in being able to supply a uniform product continually. Orders must be up to samples sent.

The British market demands a plump tender oyster, the speaker said in the English Market the size has a bearing on the price, 3 to 3 1/2 inches being the most popular. The English market is a competitive one. One criticism of the Canadian market is the irregular supply. To secure the British market it would be well for the P. E. I. Oyster Growers to cooperate and form a definite policy and having concluded that the development of the oyster industry is sufficient to meet the needs of the exact trade required and if you can stick to it to the policy then there would be nothing to fear. The important point is the consumer in oysters and demand that class of oyster and no other.

Remesle English Oysters

The speaker said the Malpeque oyster is very like the English Whistable oyster and should find a ready demand. Canadian producers have many advantages over the United States and French exporters, chief of these is that the English people are Empire minded and demand Empire products above all others. Freedom from tariffs into England, and more important still, the Government guarantee of grading. The example of the Poultry

Grasshopper Menace

As many fields are infested with grasshoppers we are asking the farmers to keep a look out for same. If they find any destruction of crops, we would advise using poison mash. This Department is absorbing part of the cost of this treatment.

Directions can be obtained from our Department or from the Entomological Laboratory, Experimental Farm.
