

Children should always increase in weight. Not to grow, not to increase in flesh, belongs to old age.

Present and future health demands that this increase in weight should be steady and never failing.

To delicate children, Scott's Emulsion brings richer blood and firmer flesh. Better color comes to the cheeks and stronger muscles to the limbs. The gain in weight is substantial; it comes to stay.

G. H. COOK

Of Special Interest to our Farmers

Delays are Dangerous.

There is, perhaps no class of the business community, as a rule, so prone to the habit of procrastinating the performance of obvious duty in the line of his avocation as the average farmer. The nature of his calling and work is such that he can, without apparent danger of immediate loss, more frequently defer the doing of definite work to a future time than can a tradesman, a merchant or a professional man. His independence of the patronage of other people—which if wisely used and not abused is one of the finest features of the farmer's life—may be used and too often is, made the excuse for putting off till "a more convenient season" the performance of work which his better judgment tells him should be done sooner. It is not generally because of a lack of intelligence or of industry that this tendency exists, but often owing to indifference or an easy-going way into which he has, it may be unconsciously, allowed himself to drift. He knows that as a rule there is a right time and a right way to do most things and that the right way, taken at the right time, is practically certain to prove the most profitable in results, and yet he too frequently defers the duty till it is too late to ensure the best outcome, and contents himself with a lower grade of work and a lower standard of attainment than his best convictions would suggest.

Even the best and most ambitious of farmers we are sure will admit that they do not farm as well as they know how. It is true of men in every calling in life that they have not improved their opportunities to the full, but we are inclined to believe this indictment applies, for the reasons above assigned, to a larger proportion of those engaged in agriculture than of those operating in other lines of business.

Speaking generally, intelligent farmers have a tolerably correct idea of the proper treatment of the soil and the cultivation of crops in order to the reasonable expectation of a profitable yield, and also of the feeding and management of their stock to produce paying returns; but the trouble is that so many so often fail to put into practice the knowledge they have, and consequently come far short of the realization which awaits the husbandman whose whole duty has been faithfully done. It is more true in the case of the farmer than of any other class of men that "Providence helps him who helps himself," for the forces of nature are more generally at his disposal and ready to contribute to his welfare if he will but avail himself of the blessings they are waiting to bestow upon his labor.

Thousands of farmers in this fair country have lost half a lifetime by continuing to depend upon the sale of grain as their main source of revenue, and clinging to the vain hope that the times and markets would so change that the old experiences would return to them, while meantime their farms have grown poorer from the fact that they have been selling its fertility, while giving it back little in the way of manure wherewith to recruit, and they find themselves contending with the double disability of low prices and light yields, and in addition to these, in many instances, having the interest on a mortgage to meet a crop which grows the year round, in bright or stormy weather.

On the other hand, those who have read a good agricultural paper thoughtfully, and profited by the experience of enterprising and advanced farmers, as seen in their work and related in their writings, by turning their attention to dairying and the raising and feeding of stock, have, while keeping up the fertility of their farms, found themselves in touch with the tendency of the times and the markets for live stock and its products, which are by far the best we have. And these are the farmers who are paying their way and feeling safe in the line of work they are pursuing. The crops they grow are designed chiefly to be fed on the farm, and they confidently look for good yields, because their land is in good heart and their crops are marketed through their stock in the form of meat and milk or wool. The man who makes live stock the main feature of his farming will plan to cut his crops at the stage in their growth when their feeding value is the greatest, which in the case of hay is when in early bloom, and of grain when in the dough state, before the sap in the straw is exhausted and only wood fiber left. This is another instance where the average farmer who despises "book learning," as well as many others who know better, suffer loss both in the quantity and quality of their crops by procrastinating, for there is always greater loss from shelling in the handling of grain that has been allowed to become fully ripe before being cut, while the fresh bright color and the weight are also wanting.

The failure to make provision for supplying some succulent food for the cows during the dry time which is pretty sure to come in the midsummer months (minimizing the milk flow), delaying the cultivation of root crops till the weeds have grown to be bold robbers that are hard to subdue, the neglect to fix the broken fence till the cows are in the corn,—these and a hundred kindred incidents which are liable to follow in the wake of the easy-going farmer, need only be hinted at as a reminder of the folly of putting off till to-morrow what had better be done to day.—Farmer's Advocate.

A PRESSMAN'S STORY

Mr. Parnham Tells How Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured His Lumbago.

Toronto, June 19.—The story of the escape of the Globe pressman, Mr. John H. Parnham, from the agonies of Lumbago, by using Dodd's Kidney Pills is unusually interesting.

Mr. Parnham writes to the Dodd's Medicine Co., Limited, thus: "I am proud to testify the wonderful efficacy of Dodd's Kidney Pills. About eight months ago I was attacked by severe pains in my back. I consulted an eminent physician, who said I had Lumbago, and told me to take Turkish baths. This did me no good. "A friend advised me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I did so, and one box cured me." My back has never troubled me since.
