ELLEN'S DIARY

The Signs Are So Clear A Dear Baby Lives Here

And it was "Company-March" to the haylands this afternoon and the first saving of hay. Of all the men of the week was left with the cows.

Tractor, hay-wagon, little truck bearing some of the hay and the gear went happily up the rise of farm-land into the blue summer haze over the fields. Roy would join them there with other machines and the saving would commence.

Granddaughter, hopes high, had on her own account disregarded other vacation stren-calls to drive the horse in the lift. James was pleased that she should wish voluntarily "to learn to be handy about a farm" quite as pleased, indeed perhaps more so, than if she brought home signal honours in some other line of learning or endeavour. When the moon, nearly full, turned them homeward through the dewy fields and with the black cat for a companion we met them up the rise, he reported "She managed her part amazingly well!"

"Now there" we chuckled to her "is a nice feather in your cap!"

And for us at home, hearts out in the fields so fragrant and lovely, there remained still some of the Saturday's chores. It was easy to forget our obligations in the heat and just loiter about to read a while, or lose time among the plants indoors and out—and chat with visitors who came. In a "Good Luck!" gesture for the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hilbert Johnston.
