

The Power of the Press.

One of the old-time editors of Michigan was boasting the other day that he had never been sued for libel, or attacked in his sanctum, but he could recall many narrow escapes.

"Walk in, gentlemen; I presume you have come to horsehide me?" "We have," they answered. "Very well. Have you thoroughly considered this matter?"

"It doesn't need any consideration," replied Carson. "You have lied about me, and I'm going to lick you within an inch of your life!"

"Just so, my friend; but first hear what I have to say. Did you ever hear of the press being stopped because the editor was cow-hided?"

"I dunno." "Well, you never did. Lick me all you choose, and my paper comes out week after week just the same.

There was an embarrassing silence right here, and the face of each whipper had an anxious look.

"What is the regular subscription price to the Herald?" interrupted Carson. "Only twelve shillings a year."

"Put us four down." "Very well—six dollars—That's correct. Ran in and see me—all of you, and if any of you want to see any of my Detroit exchanges I shall be only too glad to serve you."

Waiting for a "Rise." There was nothing particular striking about the countenance of the man who was standing at the corner of William and John street, yesterday afternoon, says the New York Journal, yet there was that in his manner which would attract attention.

"How's that?" "Why, you see the steam heating company have just laid pipes along here, and the chances are that, if I wait here awhile, there will be an explosion," and he laughed loudly.

"Don't see anything funny about that," said Bill's friend. "Don't yer? Well I do. When the explosion occurs, which of course will not be fatal, a lot of lamp knock will be thrown up, which will knock the spots out of my faded ulster. The steam company will be responsible for damages and I shall have a new coat. Catch on?"
