quarter hardly count as farms because the owners primarily earn their living elsewhere. About 25 per cent are reasonably successful commercial farms with sales of more than 10,000 a year.

Successful farming calls for skilled management and this is underlined as the weak spot in Canadian agriculture.

In Western Canada, the elevator companies are now hiring professional agronomists as field men and training elevator agents to be knowledgeable on the use of fertilizers and feeds they are selling.

Fortunately Premier Campbell and his colleagues will benefit from the forethought of their immediate predecessors in laying as thorough a groundwork as it was possible to do for their efforts in this regard.

There seems general agreement that in the future—some maintain within a decade from now—very sophisticated management practices will be required.

One disadvantage under which all the provinces will be laboring at this conference is due to a matter beyond their control.

It is reassuring to note that Canada is on the verge of adopting uniform traffic signs that will be easily understood by motorists from coast to coast.

The Council hasn't confined its activities to uniform traffic signs. It is continuing research on traffic control devices and on development of new or revised standards for traffic signs, signals and markings.

The English-speaking motorist, who complains that he cannot understand some of the French-language signs when in Quebec, will no longer have this problem.

Already, it is noted, most Western European countries have erected symbol signs, with satisfactory results.

Remains Port To The World's Fleets

The Rock of Gibraltar isn't quite as solid as it looks. Galleries, caves, basins, and tunnels riddle the 399-foot-high stone mass that juts into a narrow strait between the Atlantic and the Mediterranean.

The tunnels measure more than 30 miles, equaling the total length of all the streets and highways circling the 2.5-square-mile British Crown Colony.

The Gibraltarians have, sometimes taken shelter in the tunnels. The Rock, a natural fortress, has been besieged 15 times since Muslims invaded in A.D. 711 and built a castle there.

A new siege is underway. Two years ago Spain severed Gibraltar's only land frontier, a broad isthmus of some 250 acres that joins the Rock to the Spanish mainland.

National Geographic reports on present-day Gibraltar in its July issue in an article entitled "Gibraltar, Rock of Contention."

Each weekday Gibraltar's entire population seems to converge upon Main Street, the business and social centre.

Gibraltar's 19,000 inhabitants claim Portuguese, Italian, Maltese, Spanish, and Jewish ancestry.

Mr. La Fay says some 6,000 resident aliens from all over the world add to the cosmopolitan flavor. Gibraltar is a hospitable liberty port to all the world's fleets.

Pregnancy Reactions

Pregnancy should be a happy time but the reaction to this state is variable. The baby usually is wanted and there is an air of excitement and anticipation as the "mother-to-be" looks forward to the new life she is about to produce.

Some women become fearful or resentful and these attitudes often stem from unfortunate experiences earlier in life. This is understandable because the body and mind have been preparing for motherhood since childhood.

Ignorance also plays a role because the source of tension is the instinctive fear of the unknown. Others develop reactions of more recent origin. They may have been misled by backfence gossip.

Most of these disturbances are avoided by becoming thoroughly acquainted with the entire process of reproduction. This should stem from authoritative sources.

Tradition says Britain will hold Gibraltar only as long as the famed Barbary apes remain in residence. A band of 30 of these shrewish monkeys freely roams about the Rock.

The Gibraltar Regiment "apologists" the animals. When an ape is sent abroad to a zoo, it travels on orders, and military records show that it was posted overseas.

Nasser's seizure of the Suez was an act of piracy for which he should have been severely called to account. But when Britain, France and Israel attempted to do so, Eisenhower and Dulles threw the diplomatic weight of the United States against them and Nasser got away with it.

Thus the United States, in effect, took upon itself the crushing weight of leadership of the Western World, which now has led the U.S. into the desperate venture of Viet Nam.

Most youngsters have two or more colds a year, hence there is no need for concern.

NOTES BY THE WAY

A Greek researcher has found that people who eat a lot of olives have a remarkably low incidence of heart disease. This is the best news marlin drinkers have had in years.

A poverty area is often one where the residents don't owe as much money as the people in the fancier parts of town.

Keepers at the Plymouth Zoo in England were not able to name four king penguins in their charge because they did not know their sex.

The "other day a youngster about 4, was crying loudly in Rose and Oscar Boehlman's yard. "Why are you crying?" asked Rose. "Because my brother gets a vacation and I don't get one," the lad sobbed.

The trouble with being on time is that no one is around to appreciate it.

Middle Eastern Jigsaw

The incident of Saudi Arabia's King Faisal, snubbed in New York for a thoughtless reference to the Jews, illustrates the difficulty of an open society such as the United States faces in maintaining its diplomatic fences.

Just how deep and genuine is King Faisal's enmity for the state of Israel is questionable. He has to maintain the peace, in any case, to offset the influence of President Nasser of Egypt in the Arab-Moslem world of the Middle East.

The United States' policy is to stay on the best possible terms with all Middle-Eastern elements. The Americans keep Egypt as sweet as possible despite Nasser's deep flirtation with Soviet Russia and his flouting of Anglo-American interests.

Clearing The Hill

Mr. McBrath will to eight parked cars from the front lawn of Parliament on Aug. 1.

There could be no half measures. All the people who want to park daily on The Hill simply can't be given space. Senators, MPs and essential staff have rights to space without them Parliament cannot function.

After all the approach to the Peace Tower by the East Block or West Block should be a pleasant stroll, not a struggle to find a way through close parked cars. Parliament Hill was never meant to be a parking lot.

Revolutions Do Change

When the French populace, on July 24, 1789, stormed and captured the Bastille it marked the start of one of the bloodiest chapters in the history of France.

Most of the country's royalty, aristocrats and intellectuals went to the guillotine.

In 1904, Napoleon, as emperor, put this movement into reverse. Ever since, the French have become one of the world's most class-conscious people, sensitive to the pomp and circumstances of decorations and medals.

In 1917, Russia eliminated its royalty and aristocracy and most of its intellectuals perhaps not in such a sanguinary manner, but all the same the country was left to the proletariat.

We are taking nothing away from the Russians. They have in less than half a century made tremendous progress in many fields.

They have in this comparatively short time, caught up with what they call capitalist countries. They have practically done away with illiteracy.

Yes, in the back of our mind, the thought keeps recurring: Will a Russian Napoleon turn up? Will history repeat itself?

Injuries Running High

Rough play indulged in by some of the participants for the World Cup soccer championship in England in the midst of public attention as the team played the quarter-finals on the way to the final. The ex-champion, Brazil, led the scene for some when they were eliminated from the tournament.

Included in the nine was Pele acknowledged as the outstanding soccer player in the world today. The Italian team lost its greatest star, Balzaretti. He was badly hurt as was the French player Jacques Simon who was taken from the field on a stretcher.

The soccer player's uniform offers no protection from the effects of body contact when a kicker, wearing hard shoes, misdirects his kick, unintentionally or otherwise, and strikes a player of another player, it hurts.

Shoppers of soccer spectators are rated volatile. When one of their beloved players is injured, they are often at the point of rioting. Their mood is affected only by the tournament rules, which do not permit injured man to be replaced.

Because of the great popularity of the game throughout the world, rules may be changed eventually, stipulating soft shoes for the players and the substitution of another player for the man who is forced to leave the game because of injury.

The Everlasting Hills. Since time immemorial the hills have been special places. The old gods dwell there, and only those who were favored by the gods could even visit their sacred precincts. Rain and lightning came down from the hills. Eagles nested there. Monks of the valleys and looked up into the hills in awe.

Later, much later, it was said that only the natives of any land were familiar with the hills. Outlanders stayed in the valleys where the old roads ran and where the towns and villages had grown up close beside the watercourses.

If it took a long time to learn that without hills there would be no valleys, that for every valley there were two hills and beyond those hills were other valleys.

But the hills still stood, stubborn and remote, and those who climbed them learned what the hillmen had already known—that the gods still dwelt there, gods of trees and rocks and clean sweet air.

They learned that the hills bowl of sky was vastly bigger
