

West German Steel Output Up

DUESSELDORF, Germany (AP)—West Germany produced 24,506,623 tons of steel during 1957, a record and an increase of 5.7 per cent over 1956.

The production figure, reported by the Duesseeldorf branch of the federal statistical office, is 10,000,000 tons greater than the highest annual output for all of Germany before the Second World War.

West Germany has ranked as the world's third largest steel producer after the United States and the Soviet Union since it surpassed British production two years ago.

RAID DOMINO GAME
BOULBAIX, France (Reuters)—Algerian gunmen Thursday burst into a cafe here and broke up a game of dominoes being played by four of their compatriots. They killed one player and wounded the other three.

FAMOUS HANDS

Opening lead—queen of hearts. Yesterday we showed how the Italian North-South pair made five hearts in this dramatic hand played at Naples in 1952 during the world championship match against the United States.

When the American pair played the hand at the other table, with Sam Stayman North and George Rapee South, the amazing sequence of bids shown took place. Ricci, for Italy, opened with two spades. In the Italian system, this showed a weak hand made up of a two-suiter. Chiarradia responded two no trump, requesting partner to show his other suit.

Stayman, animated by no such curiosity, doubled to alert Rapee that he had an excellent hand and that the adverse bidding was not to be taken seriously. Ricci, an accommodating fellow, dutifully bid three clubs, whereupon Rapee jumped to four hearts.

Chiarradia had heard enough and passed, aware that his side was outgunned. But Ricci, not content to sell so cheaply, ventured four spades which West corrected to five clubs.

For some reason Stayman did not doubt—possibly he hoped the Italians would go a "tep" further. No doubt, he was confident five hearts would be made.

When five hearts was doubled by Chiarradia, Ricci, conscience-stricken by his false display of strength previously, bid six clubs. When this rolled around to him, Stayman, highly skeptical that this contract could be made, doubled.

Stayman was right on both counts. The opponents did bid six clubs, and furthermore they did not make it. In fact, all they made was one club. The Italian pair went down five—900 points.

Since the Italian pair at the other table, with the North-South cards, had made five hearts—450 points—the American team gained 450 points on the deal.

All of which contributed to the ultimate American victory.

High Commissioner Likes His Job In London Town

By ALAN HARVEY
Canadian Press Staff Writer
LONDON (CP)—George Drew likes his new job.

He proved that on arrival. He got off a boat train, stepped into an automobile and made his first speech as Canadian high commissioner in London half an hour later—probably a diplomatic record.

That was four months ago, and he's been going strong ever since.

He has delivered several dozen speeches, travelled to Scotland, Scandinavia and Germany, handled arrangements for Canada's biggest trade mission, done the diplomatic rounds and re-established contacts with old friends in British government and industry.

NOTABLE ENGAGEMENTS

He has lunched with the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh, dined with old friends such as Sir Winston Churchill and Lord Beaverbrook, seen Prime Minister Macmillan at least a dozen times and entertained prominent Canadians at his official residence in Mayfair.

The schedule is often tight. Almost 100,000 Canadians visit Britain every year and many want to see "Mr. Canada in London."

And Mr. Drew genuinely wants to see as many as he can. It means the corporation lawyer-turned-politician-turned-diplomat may be on duty until the small hours, but there are no complaints.

"Frankly, I enjoy it," he says. "I feel perfectly at home. After all, I probably know more people in London than I do in any big city in Canada."

A transatlantic citizen, he has crossed the ocean 40 times and has links with statesmen, businessmen, veterans, publishers and lawyers. These personal contacts are particularly useful in London, a post that calls for knowledge of a wide range of activities.

Many of the Commonwealth high commissioners are, like himself, men drawn from public life.

OLD FRIENDSHIPS

Some friendships go back a long way. Mr. Drew had his first meeting with Churchill, for instance, in February, 1916, at Hill 63 near "Plug Street," or Ploegsteert in Flanders. Drew was with the Canadian artillery, Churchill leading the London Scottish. The Canadian envoy recalls how impressed Churchill was with the late "Froshest" Macdonald, a Canadian forestry commander with a stentorian voice and a gift for "peculiarly ornate" profanity.

Canada House is the biggest and busiest of all Canadian missions. As the core of the Commonwealth and the channel of communication to Ottawa from many other embassies, it handles an enormous flow of traffic.

Mr. Drew probably will place more emphasis than some predecessors on the social and representational side. Public affairs, rather than complex policy-making, may be his specialty.

The former premier of Ontario, and former national leader of the Progressive Conservative party, Mr. Drew goes out of his way to help newspaper men. One of his first acts was to introduce a twice-monthly series of press conferences. He has lunched with most leading British editors.

BRILLIANT HOSTESS

His wife, Fiorenza, is a brilliant hostess. A slender, lively woman with a clothes flair partly derived from a continental background, she shares her husband's extrovert tastes, and feels a big part of the London job is making visiting Canadians feel at home.

With the Drews is their 17-year-old daughter Sandra, who says she spends much of her time just strolling around London, often alone, looking at the sights. Her brother, Edward, 19, now at McGill University, won the intercollegiate heavyweight boxing championship in 1957.

BIG RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Drew was appointed high commissioner last June. He was on the point of moving into a new house in Toronto, and the job came as a surprise. Two months broadly on the activities of some 900 men and women in various government offices, centred round Canada House.

Among his top men are deputy high commissioner Sydney Pierce, formerly of Montreal, and political specialist Arnold Smith, a native of Toronto and one of the external affairs department's most widely travelled officers.

A recent arrival is Pierre Trottier of Montreal, a leading French-Canadian politician. Press relations have long been handled by Campbell Moodie, from Kelowna, B.C.

Mr. Drew's office is a vast, high-ceilinged room, looking out on the lions and fountains of Trafalgar Square. Canada House, opened June 29, 1925, used to be the Union Club, and the high commissioner works where club members sipped port and smoked cigars. The building is massive, with an immense stone portico supported by four Ionic columns. The maple leaf motif is worked into the big bronze front doors, and Canadian woods are used in the interior.

ENJOYS WORK

At 63, the tall, erect high commissioner is in excellent health and spirits. His speeches are free and easy, and spaced with anecdotes.

He often speaks off the cuff. At a formal luncheon at Pinewood Studios, he indulged in some zesty reminiscence about the time he went to Petrie's ice rink in his hometown of Guelph, Ont., to see the Great Train Wreck, first film to tell a rounded story. He was nine years old at the time.

Again, he recalled how he and a friend painstakingly saved 50 cents to buy materials for making a biplane glider. They tossed for the privilege of the first flight off the Drew roof. Drew lost, his friend made the flight and broke a leg. That, he says, may be why he later chose the artillery over the air force.

Mr. Drew likes his job. And judging by the way members of the Canada Club greeted him at a November dinner, Canadians in London like the way he is doing it.

Curtain Falls On Nudest Show

PARIS (Reuters)—The curtain falls today on the Folies Bergere, "the nudest show on earth."

The fabulous 40-act show Ah, Quelle Folie (Oh, What Madness) is closing for an indefinite period after a three-year run.

Stagehands and technicians who struck briefly a month ago for a 30-per-cent wage increase have been fired. According to the management, the naked truth is that raises would drop the curtain forever.

The Folies have been a family-run affair since Paul Derval took it over in 1918.

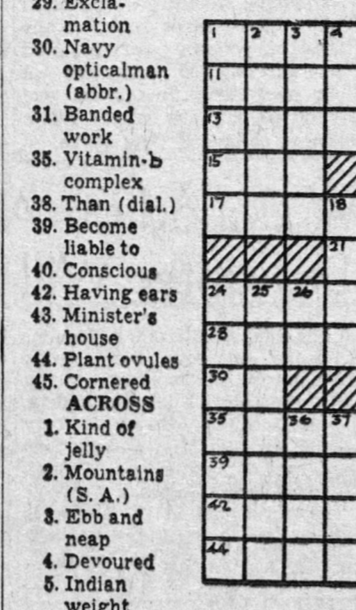

Derval's success formula of beautiful girls, spectacle and music—and perhaps more girls made the Folies a leading tourist attraction.

The same formula, followed since the theatre opened in 1863, has been so successful more than 100,000 persons have seen the performances.
