MARTIN AND LEWIS, CAPITOL THEATRE, SUMMERSIDE

This Paramount film, which was produced by Hal Wallis. It is based on a Damon Runyon story concerning the sport of kings, horse racing. Provided with this highly exploitable background, Dean and Jerry run amok on a wild course of comedy. This time the smooth talking Dean (his monicker in the film is Honey Talk) tangles with the gentleman of the underworld, and soon finds himself up to his cousin Jerry Lewis' neck in trouble. The fabulously funny fable is launched along its merry way when Martin finds himself in hook to bookie king Sheldon Leonard. He is given an alternative: fix a race or accept a friendly funeral. Martin promptly decides to fix the race and gets his veterinary cousin, Lewis, to accompany him. A slight hitch in plans develops when Dean falls in love with Marie Millar, the lovely owner of a horse that is marked for disposal, and Jerry finds himself smitten by a lady veterinarian, Pat Crowley. In the face of these events, the bookie king shows up to see that the boys do the wrong thing the right way. But it avails him naught. Love has put the boys on the straight and narrow, and an accident puts Jerry on the horse in the hilariously climactic steeplechase. In the course of the Hal Kanter screenplay, both Martin and Lewis find time to render a few songs that are both romantic and comic in nature. Among the more zany sequences is the one in which the boys get mixed up with an oriental Poojah's harem and Lewis masquerades as a harem attendant's garb. province.
