"ACT OF VIOLENCE," TALE OF TENSE MANHUNT, PACKS TERRIFIC WALLOP

Suspense is engendered to the point of terrific excitement in M-G-M's remarkable new drama, "Act of Violence," currently on view at the Capitol Theatre.

This is the story of a man hounded by a relentless fate and of a fearful vengeance. For years Frank Enley, a successful young businessman with a wife and infant child, has been trying to escape a spectre out of his past. During the war, in a moment of cowardice, he has been responsible for the torture and death of a group of his comrades. Only one man, Joe Parkson, has survived and, filled with an almost psychopathic hatred for Enley, he sets out to trace him down and to exact an eye for an eye.

Enley first finds he is being pursued while fishing in a California mountain lake. Terrorized, he flees from place to place, always following the shadow of his mortal enemy. At length, more dead than alive and almost driven to the point of insanity, he is befriended by Pat, world-weary habitue of cheap dives, who introduces him to Johnny, a professional killer. Johnny, forcing Enley's story from him, makes a bargain. He will kill Joe Parkson in return for cash. The outcome of this macabre bargain results in one of the most breath taking climaxes the screen has ever produced and a solution in which Enley is finally able to redeem himself and his manhood.
