

Meeting Sought With N.B. Group

The West Point Ferry committee is trying to arrange a meeting with Buctouche, N.B., representatives at Tormentine early next week, chairman Peter McCaull, Ellerslie, told this paper Saturday.

Mr. McCaull and other members of his committee were disappointed last week when nobody from Buctouche attended the Moncton meeting, called to further discuss the problem of the New Brunswick terminal for the proposed ferry service. DID NOT ATTEND

Although Buctouche spokesmen came to Tormentine for a meeting with Shediak and P.E. Island people earlier this winter, even though the people at Shediak had telephoned to say a threatening snowstorm kept them at home, they did not attend the Moncton party.

Mr. McCaull and his committee members went to Buctouche to have a look at the docking facilities, but they were unable to get in touch with any of the people there who had earlier shown interest in the development.

The Ellerslie man was optimistic about the possibilities of the proposed new service yesterday. He feels that his committee is getting solid support in this province, and he reports a lively interest in New Brunswick.

Shutdown Faces Halifax City Trolley Service

HALIFAX (CP)—Another city transit utility is in trouble. Nova Scotia Light and Power Co. Ltd., which operates the Halifax trolley bus system, says that unless the city gives financial help the service is headed for abandonment.

Beset by rising costs and slump in passenger traffic, the company set April 1 as a deadline for decision by city council on the future of the system. The trolleys serve all Halifax and enter neighboring Dartmouth by the Angus L. Macdonald Bridge across Halifax harbor. The system is one of the largest in Canada still privately operated.

A Russell Harrington, Nova Scotia Light and Power general manager, said Friday there are three alternatives:

1. Another substantial fare increase that would drive away more traffic and lead in time to suspension of service.
2. A city subsidy.
3. Purchase of the system by the city.

The company reported an operating loss of $102,000 for 1961. It claims total losses of $850,000 in the last 11 years. Since 1958 the basic fare has been 15 cents.

Dramatic Cures Reported In Heart Surgery Cases

"There are few areas in the treatment of disease in which the word cure is as dramatic as it is in the correction of defects of the heart through heart surgery," according to Dr. John C. Callaghan, director of the department of cardiovascular and thoracic surgery, University of Alberta Hospital, Edmonton.

"A child born blue in color, gasping for breath, with little or no hope in life is suddenly changed to a normal color with hope for the future to go as far as his will and enthusiasm can take him. This happens in heart surgery. It has not always been so. If in 1937 we were to say that people were to be cured through heart surgery, it would not have been true. But a year later, the first and most simple of congenital heart defects was corrected by Dr. Gross in Boston. By simply tying off an abnormal tube between the high pressure aorta coming out of the heart and the low pressure artery to the lungs, a child, whose life expectancy was to reach the late twenties, could be given a full, normal outlook.

"But this was the simplest of all defects. Ahead still lay the complex and the unmanageable problems many of which have fallen under complete domination by the surgeon and the heart-lung pump. BLUE BABY HOPE

The blue baby can now live a normal life. But even as late as 1944 no operation was possible to the blue baby, and between that year and 1955, only partial correction of this defect was possible. Since 1955, the use of the heart-lung pump and plastics to close holes in the heart and to build new areas of the outer wall, children can be returned to a completely normal life. Simple holes in the heart are now curable—the challenge is gone from these defects. They are the milestones of progress and indicate work accomplished.

"Ahead still lie crippling diseases that, with work and energy on the part of the medical investigator, the scientist, the surgeon and cardiologist, will undoubtedly fall to domination by this team. Possibly ten years from now we can add to our list of conquests by heart surgery, children born with the dreaded transposition of the great vessels—one of the great killers in the newborn period of life.

"We have added to our successes the ability of the surgeon to completely replace the major valves in the heart itself. Patients in Canada are walking around with their very important aortic valve now made of plastic and functioning beat by beat throughout their lives. The mitral valve has now been replaced totally by a plastic artificial valve. Some problems still remain. Prevention of blood stream infection is a very important aspect in patients with artificial heart valves.
