IN MEMORIAM

MRS. DANIEL O'HALLORAN

In the communities of Rice Point and vicinity, the customary joyous festivities of the Christmas season, were to a great extent overshadowed by a deep feeling of sadness which pervaded the homes of this locality when it was learned that a dearly beloved and highly esteemed resident had been called to her eternal reward on Monday, December 22 in the person of Mrs. Daniel O'Halloran, aged 42, daughter of the late Peter Currie and Mrs. Currie of Rice Point. Mrs. O'Halloran had been ill for several months, during which she received the best of loving care and expert medical attention.

During her last illness she accepted her suffering with an unflinching courage, and an unwavering faith in the goodness and wisdom of God, that was a source of edification to all those in attendance upon her, and to the many friends who came to visit with her. A devout member of the Roman Catholic Church, she died fortified by its last rites, attended by Rev. J. McGillivray, C. Ss. R. of Holy Redeemer Parish.

The large number of floral offerings, Mass cards, and messages of sympathy, received by the bereaved family, gave ample testimony of the esteem in which she was held by friends and neighbors.

The funeral, held on Friday, December 26 at St. Martin's Church South Shore, of which she had been for many years a faithful parishioner, was largely attended. The Requiem High Mass was celebrated by Rev. J. McGillivray, C. Ss. R. Present in the sanctuary also were Rev. Father A. MacLellan, C. Ss. R., rector of Holy Redeemer Parish and Rev. John Sullivan of St. Dunstan's University. Services at the grave were conducted by Father MacLellan assisted by Father McGillivray. The pallbearers were: Winston Taylor, Lee Taylor, Francis Murphy, John E. MacDonald, Roy Wilson, Stanley Dolan.

Many will grieve for her passing particularly the sorrowing members of her family circle which includes her husband Daniel, and one son Louis nine-years-old, her mother, Mrs. Peter Currie, one sister, Marguerite, Mrs. Lorne McAlester of Otterburn Park, Quebec, and two brothers, James and Wilbert, at home in Rice Point.

May she rest in peace.

Card Of Thanks

Mrs. Peter Currie and Family of Rice Point, also Mr. D.F. O'Halloran and Louis wish to extend their sincere thanks to all kind neighbors and friends who assisted them, in their recent sad bereavement, also to those who sent flowers, Mass cards and letters of sympathy.

Candlelight Service At Marshfield

The lovely seasonal Christmas decorations of evergreen, stars, multicolored lights, and gaily adorned Christmas tree provided a fitting setting for the beautiful candlelight service held in Central Church on Sunday prior to Christmas day.

The combined choirs of Brackley, York and Central and the beautiful pipe organ music pealed out the sacred carols of the Birthday of the King and Saviour.

The Rev. Mr. Sproule through his address took the congregation on a journey through the different countries where the Christmas carols originated and the Christmas traditions and symbols come to have a certain meaning.

This address was interspersed by singing of carols "Gentle Mary Laid Her Child", "Christians Awake, Salute the Happy Morn", "Silent Night", "O Come All Ye Faithful", "Joy to the World" and "First Noel".

The collection and its dedication followed by "O Little Town of Bethlehem" and Mizpah benediction brought the service to a close.

The next meeting is to be held in the school, if there is no invitation, when roll call will be answered by each member singing a verse of an old love song.

False Face

By E. C. Buley CHAPTER XXII Continued

"The French police had the passport to guide them," he said, "the general description, and the photograph as well."

"My passport," Peter reminded him. "My photograph."

"Well, Whalen was able to pass for you," Keogh answered. "And so was this dead body."

"All right," Peter said. "What else?"

"Doctor Lepine," Keogh answered with a grimace. "He vouched for this Henry Smith in the end. I had to listen to a good deal about professional etiquette, and vulgar curiosity, I may say, but he was very positive on the point you wanted settled. Smith is an Englishman, and the victim of misfortune from his birth, the doctor said."

"Putting it briefly, then, you have discovered nothing?" Peter said.

"I showed you drawings to Kelly, the 'Berlinia' steward," Keogh continued, ignoring the question. "They seemed to mean nothing at all to him. The impressions he retained of Whalen were of a handsome face, a marked American accent, and speech rich in American idioms and slang."

"Very well, Mr. Keogh," Peter said. "I may have some further inquiries made, on different lines. I'll let you know in a day or two."

After that, the time went very slowly to a man as impatient as Peter was. But at last it was mid-afternoon, and he was dressed in formal clothes, and asking for Miss Lephone at her hotel. There was no delay.

"You are expected, sir," said the page boy, as he threw open the sitting-room door and announced Peter by name.

Lola was on her feet, dressed in a pajama suit of orange and blue, with very wide pantaloons, and a scanty jumper which left her round arms and neck bare. As Peter looked at her sternly, she lifted both hands in the air, like the victim of a hold-up.

"Don't shoot, Colonel," she said cheerfully. "I've come down, long ago."

Peter continued to regard her, with an immovable face. He was very conscious of the circumstance that no mere words of hers were adequate to such a meeting, and besides, he had come to enlist her help, rather than to punish her.

It was hard to believe that this glowing little beauty, who looked like some strange exotic insect in her fantastic but becoming dress, had entrapped him and kept him drugged, and allowed him to rot in captivity while his life's happiness went to wreck.

"Will you have tea in the English way, or will lemon?" Lola asked. "Or can I shake you a cocktail? For pity's sake sit down, and park that shiny hat somewhere."

"What on earth are you doing in London?" Peter asked, obeying mechanically. "Yes, tea with cream."

"I'm here to make a couple of pictures," Lola announced airily. "Don't think that you are the only one who was hoisted to fame and fortune by that little bit of trouble we had in New York."

"A little bit of trouble," Lola called it? Peter asked, struggling between indignation and anger at the past, and laughter at her audacity and sang froid.

"I suppose you know what happened to you?" Lola asked, as she lit a cigarette; and after a puff, stuck it between his lips.

"I know something of it; but I'd like to hear you tell it, in your own way," Peter invited.

Lola wanted nothing better. "You see," she concluded at last. "I was in love with that man, and I didn't care who had to suffer, so long as he got clear. And it came out all right for you, Big Boy. From what I hear, you cannot paint pictures fast enough to please the nuts in Chicago. And here am I, going to be a star in a year's time; unless you start some trouble about what happened so long ago, and bring me into it."

"Yes, that's your side of it," Peter agreed. "I suppose nothing else matters."

"Don't get me wrong," the girl begged. "I'm here to set things right, as far as it can be done. I don't mask the fact that the question was her first comment on Peter's story."

"I'll show you what he's like," Peter said, producing a blank notebook and a pencil. "He's easy to remember."
