Opening lead—nine of clubs.

One of the most impressive examples of the fine art of bidding I ever witnessed occurred in a rubber bridge game at the Cavendish Club, New York, when the hand shown was dealt. South was Leo Roet, life master and winner of many championships, including the 1949 Masters Pairs.

It would be difficult to conceive that any experienced player, even from the most conservative school, would duplicate the magnificent restraint and bidding technique shown by Roet in this hand.

Imagine holding the South hand, having your partner open the bidding, follow with a strong rebid, and still stay out of a six or seven contract. Such self-control it seems to me, is uncanny.

Nevertheless, in cold analysis, the logic of each of Roet's bids can be fully sustained. The two club response, rather than three clubs, would undoubtedly find many supporters. The slow approach in hands where the final contract appears to be in doubt has much to recommend it.

The three heart bid, being still another new suit by responder, is forcing, and continues the bidding at the same leisurely and unexcited pace. The tremendous power of South's hand remains masked, awaiting developments.

The first real warning of a possible total misfit comes when North bids four diamonds. North's failure to bid three notrump or to support either of South's suits proclaims at least a six card diamond suit. Roet's modest four heart bid was geared to this disappointing development.

North's four spade bid clarifies the entire situation. Obviously, the spade bid must be based on a five card suit. Equally clear if the identification of a seven card diamond suit. This must be true because if North had had only six diamonds his previous rebid would have been three spades, to identify a 6-5 hand.

Knowing, therefore, that North at best had but one card for both his suits, Roet bid only five clubs. He made exactly eleven tricks.

His realistic appraisal of the situation, despite the over powering strength of the hand, is worthy of the highest commendation.

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

BEDTIME STORIES

All A Bluff

Always some folks are around,
With a threat that ends in sound.
—Bobby Coon.

Yowler the Bobcat sounds much worse than he really is. His snarls and growls and yowls sound very bad indeed. It is his way of frightening other folks and making them think they are in a lot more danger than they really are. The truth is, while Yowler is a good fighter when he has to fight, he keeps away from trouble when he can. He isn't nearly as bad as he sounds.

Bobby Coon and Mrs. Bobby were in a small cave in a rocky ledge where Yowler was living in a comfortable den. They had been driven there by hunters. It was no longer safe for them over in the Green Forest where they had been living in a hollow tree. Yowler didn't like their coming there at all. He spat and snarled and growled and told them what dreadful things he would do to them if they didn't go back where they belonged. The entrance to the little cave in which they were was too small for Yowler to get through, so they were perfectly safe in there.

At first both Bobby and Mrs. Bobby were very much frightened. They are themselves very good fighters, but they were afraid of Yowler. So they stayed in their little cave out of Yowler's reach and tried to decide what to do. Yowler went off hunting. He had good luck. He had had a good dinner when he returned and had forgotten all about his treats. He stretched out on the ledge in front of his den and began to purr just the way Black Pussy the Cat at Farmer Brown's house purrs when he is feeling good.

"Listen," said Bobby. "Do you hear that?"

"Of course I do," replied Mrs. Bobby. "What of it?"

"Yowler is feeling good. Perhaps he isn't as bad as he sounded. Perhaps he will let us stay here awhile," said Bobby.

Presently Yowler yawned. He got up and walked over to sniff at the entrance to the little cave. "So, you are still there," said he. "I warned you that you better not stay."

Bobby said nothing. Mrs. Yowler yawned again. Then once more he spoke. "Just keep out of my way," he growled. Somehow that growl didn't sound ugly.

"We will," replied Bobby Coon. "We'll keep out of your way all the time if you'll just let us stay here."

"How long do you want to stay?" growled Yowler.

"Just until it is safe for us to go back to our home in the Green Forest," said Bobby.

"How long will that be" demanded Yowler.

Of course Bobby and Mrs. Bobby didn't know. They couldn't know when the hunting season would end. They said so.

"All right," said Yowler. "Just keep out of my sight."

Now, there was nothing in the world that Bobby and Mrs. Bobby wanted more than to keep out of Yowler's sight, so of course they promised they would. They had begun to understand that all of Yowler's dreadful threats of what he would do to them were a bluff. He didn't really mean them. Quite a lot of folks are like Yowler.
