HASZARD'S GAZETTE.

Wednesday, October 17, 1855.

☞ We issue to-day a whole sheet, in order to put our readers in possession of the details of the Storming of Sebastopol. In our last we gave in part the London Times version of the affair, and have finished it in this issue; we also give to day, the Daily News, account, which differs in a few particulars.

We were rather disappointed in not receiving by the last Mail, accounts of further successes on the part of the Allies, and were in hopes, that the fall of Sebastopol had led to the evacuation of the Crimea by the Russians, or at least an attempt by the discomfited army, to make good their retreat from the scene of their late disaster. It would seem, however, that such a contingency is not as certain as was supposed, the enemy being still in a position so secure, and so well fortified, that it will take some hard fighting yet before he is dislodged. Some of the English papers pretend to depreciate the conquest that has been effected at the cost of so much blood and treasure. "Odessa and Nicolaieff," say they, "are the ports in which the true strength of the Czar lies. Sebastopol is but a harbor for refuge from the storms of winter." There may be some truth in the assertion, that Odessa and Nicolaieff are more important places than Sebastopol, and, that the loss of them would have been a severe blow, there can be no doubt. Still, if it be the firm determination of the Allies—as we trust it is—to deprive Russia of its supremacy in the Black Sea, we cannot see how they could have better begun than with this same harbor of refuge. And is it nothing that the enemy's fleet has been so completely, and we may add—so disgracefully to him—annihilated? If Odessa and Nicolaieff must fall, before a permanent peace is established, their capture or destruction is surely facilitated by the previous one of Sebastopol. It may seem impertinent in us, at such a distance from the scene of action, and whose information is all at second-hand, to offer any opinion as to what may be the ultimate result; still, we cannot refrain from a wish, that another divisive blow may be yet struck, either by the reduction of some important fortress in the Baltic, or the defeat or dispersion of the Crimean army. In such case, the prestige that would attend the arms of the Allies would be of material effect on the terms, that they would be able to dictate, and would be the means of bringing Sweden to a determination to declare openly for the Allies, as well as of compelling Austria to relinquish her vacillating policy, and join with England and France in prescribing such definite limits to the power of Russia as will secure Europe against any future attempts on the part of the Autocrat to add to the territorial acquisitions of his already overgrown empire. The power of the Emperor of the Russians is undoubtedly great, but, like all despotisms, it stands upon an uncertain basis. A revolution—not of opinion—for Russia is too ignorant to have an opinion, but of feeling, occasioned by the continuous demands of men and money, the distresses of the commercial men, and consequently of the landholders, may do more towards compelling a monarch to submit than all that has yet taken place.

CITY COUNCIL.—Last evening the City Recorder having been called upon to say when his opinion touching the report of the Committee on the Common of Charlottetown might be expected, answered that he would be prepared to give it on Wednesday next the 24th instant. Some conversation ensued about the interest taken in the matter by the public, and it was suggested that an intimation of the Recorder's intention should be given in the public papers. The Council meet at 7 o'clock in the evening.

NOTHING so much pleases us, as the growing taste for the conveniences of life, which is every day developing itself among people of all classes. One of the best signs of increasing prosperity, is the demand for such articles as tend to make home more attractive. Our imports are not only increasing in number and value, but also in variety; and the man whose purse contains a few "splendid shillings," or more splendid sovereigns, may find the materials of enjoying life in Prince Edward Island with satisfaction and comfort, and in the possession of all the necessaries, and of very many of the luxuries of life. We were led into these reflections, by a walk through the premises of Mr. William B. Dawson, where was presented to our rather astonished vision, such a collection of Stoves, of all kinds and sizes, and of such varieties, as to suffice to meet the wants of all, from the wealthiest to the most humble and unpretending. We were shown a Cooking Stove, intended to be heated by coal, which is so arranged, that the fire burns from the bottom, leaving no cinder, and to a certain degree, consuming its own smoke—Arnott's invention, we think. We would willingly describe it, but that could not be done without diagrams. It is well worth the examining. A splendid marble mantle-piece, with a stove-grate to accompany it, would become one of our aristocratic drawing rooms; while at the side of it, may be seen one of those useful appendages of the same sort, though different in degree, that would be extremely appropriate for an apartment that "served for parlor and kitchen, and hall." Not a little gratified were we with seeing an immense copper boiler, encased in wood, in the act of being filled with water, to be heated for the purposes of the Tannery. The erection of such implements of trade, is another gratifying proof of progress. We wish our young friend the success that his exertions and enterprise merit.
