

Alberta's Brazeau River Dam Set For Final Trials Sept. 1

EDMONTON (CP)—The $35,000,000 Brazeau River dam, designed to produce power and to control river pollution, will be ready for its final shakedown tests Sept. 1.

The development, undertaken by Calgary Power Limited with financial help from the Alberta government, is scheduled to begin power production in November.

The dam is located 125 miles southwest of Edmonton.

The main 205-foot dam—tail-race in Alberta—and the water storage facilities were completed in 1961. They were into operation immediately as a pollution control system by helping to control water flow to the North Saskatchewan river in spring and winter.

Powerhouse and powerhouse facilities 11 miles downstream from the main dam now are nearing completion. The company has installed a turbine in the powerhouse that will operate in the same direction as whether pumping water or generating electricity.

The first unit will produce 210,000 horsepower of electric energy, about one-quarter Calgary power's current output on that the U.S. could solve its automation problems but was optimistic about Canada.

Canadian advantages in beating the problems of automation, he said, include a smaller population than the U.S., availability to American experience in automation; more time to plan effective and useful programs in cybernetics; and a history of government support for social planning.

Middle Managers, Engineers Are Target Of Automation

By DAN POWERS

EDMONTON (CP)—The next target of automation is the middle-level manager and engineer, says a United States sociologist.

Dr. Donald N. Michael of the Institute for Policy Studies, Washington, D.C., Monday told delegates to a conference on education and automation that U.S. middle-level managers and engineers are being replaced by computers capable of routine decision-making and design.

"Engineers in the past were used to design car motors or a bridge. Now, the specifications of a customer are fed into a computer and the computer designs the product—and designs it to maximum marketability."

TENANT LOSES ASSAULT CASE

TORONTO (CP)—A Toronto man, who explained he gave his landlord a black eye because the man walked in on his wife while she was in bed, was fined $25 for common assault in magistrate's court here.

Frederick Bonear, 22, said the landlord said he wanted to wash the walls.

While imposing the fine, Magistrate Donald Graham said: "Your wife should have been up anyway." It was between 8 and 9 a.m.
