The Stars Say

For Tomorrow THE auguries are not encouraging for any sort of festivities or celebrations. There is a definite tendency to overdo, in excess emotions, energies and, as well, indulgences. With inner urges keyed to unguarded action and overstimulated impulses, there may be stirred up reprisals, misunderstanding and treachery. Watch your step, keep alert to snares and pitfalls.

If It Is Your Birthday Those whose birthday it is, may find themselves in a critical year, in which there may be open as well as hidden and sinister enmity, discord and defeat. The energies, emotions and drives tend to precipitate action, aggressive and rebellious. Under such stimuli it would be easy to become offensive, with reprisals from hidden, secret and malicious comebacks. Calm discretion may avert real trouble.

A child born on this day, while active, energetic and aggressive, is prone to overact, thus inviting enmity and forceful resentment.

For Monday The astrological forecast shows "mixed influences." While there may be much activity with pleasant and progressive contacts, adventures and probable honors or favors as tokens of appreciation, or in friendly gesture, at the same time there is danger of some social error, or emotional involvement.

If It Is Your Birthday Those whose birthday it is, may encounter a year of challenging conditions. In relation to signal honors, rewards, signs of preferment and appreciation, in business, public relations or professional positions. At the same time there is a menace of social blunder, emotional tangles or other unhappy and regrettable development, in which indiscretions undermine exceptional prospects.

A child born on this day, is endowed with excellent prospects in life, with honors and distinction, professional and social. It may gain by attention to its social culture.

ELLEN'S DIARY

By An Island Farmer's Wife

At Alderlea, and in many another Island farm-house, we are sure, as well as in homes over wide distances, we are saddened by the news of Agricola's passing. There is that peculiarity about our living—we make no provision in it for the losses we must face, and so we are often bereft, by a sudden death, even though it be not untimely. "The young may die; the old must" is a truth we find hard to accept, hoping to continue the nice associations that have been ours along a number of years. It is difficult to lose the old friends—those the years have proved. Even we, who knew better, had an idea that the Newsy Notes we enjoyed so well would be there for us, forever—a library rich and varied spiced with humor, a fund of information on the subjects we enjoy. Though it was our loss not to have known him personally (Next summer we shall call to visit him). We came to know and appreciate him very well through his writings. We found him to be "a gentleman of the old school", fine and gifted, kindly and good.

We remember his kindly interest and assistance to the like of Jangle and us, when puzzled over the identity of some flower of field or woods or a jaunty bird of summer, we left the matter to him. How willing in his busy life he was to impart his findings to us and to others. The illimitable treasures of the world about, he tried to open to the careless or those who would learn; the fascination of others than those of the human family, the rich meaning and mystery of the world of stars above the night places. Botanist, naturalist, and versed as well in literature, art music. How well indeed was the man's life filled and how beautifully! No time there, no space for petty stuff that thrives in idle minds.

"Live and Help Live" was obviously his ideal which springs from a desire to "act well thy part—there all the honour lies."

Now far from his boyhood home in England, he rests in another sea-girt Isle, one that may well be proud of this adopted son, who contributed always to her welfare. His memory will be perpetuated forever and a day in her floral emblem—the dainty Lady's slipper—of his choosing. And at Alderlea in the Golden Willows grown from cuttings from his parentology, Dr. Stewart Wolf.

That Body Of Yours

CAUSES OF HEARTBURN (CARDIOSPASM)

An elderly couple in their eighties were having a domestic difficulty. They felt that one of their children was not acting fairly in a property matter. As a matter of fact the child (50 years old) was making a long-range view of the problem, actually acting in the best interests of the couple but, because they could not have things arranged in their own way, they believed him ungrateful.

The mother was of the buoyant, outspoken type, but the father had nothing to say and brooded continuously. Shortly after the difficulty arose, the father developed heartburn (cardiospasm) which was relieved to some extent by baking soda and a quieting drug. Their physician advised only quietness and trying to see that while their child did not see things in the same light as themselves, his intentions were good.

Why did the father have heartburn and the mother remain free of it? It was because of the difference in temperament of this elderly couple.

It is known that heartburn is caused by irregular movements of the lower two-thirds of the oesophagus (the tube carrying food from mouth to stomach) which fails to propel or squeeze the food smoothly on its way to the stomach. This irregularity occurs in stomach movements also. In a former article on cardiospasm, it was pointed out that healthy persons under stress suffer with cardiospasm. In Gastro-

DOROTHY DIX SAYS—

Fitting Children For Life

Teach Them Manners, To Get Along With Others, Not To Be Quitters

A MOTHER WRITES: "I have three small children. What shall I teach them?" Well, after you have taught them to fear God, keep the Commandments and wash behind their ears, the next most important thing to teach them is good manners, which are the open sesame to all the doors in life through which they will want to pass. Good manners will carry one farther than looks or money or talent. They are a letter of credit that the world honors at sight. They form our first impression of every individual we meet and attract or repulse us. By a stranger's manners we make a snap judgment of his breeding, birth, background, social status, education, character, disposition and the kind of mother he or she has.

Of course, sometimes we are wrong. Manners are not invariably an index to the soul. There are rough diamonds who possess all of the major and minor virtues, but a hurrying world hasn't the time to polish them up, so they get passed up, and unless they have the most phenomenal brilliance, their worth is never recognized.

START IN INFANCY So begin in the cradle teaching your children good manners. Teach them how to eat, how to enter a room, how to speak, what to say and how to say it, how to pull out a lady's chair, how to help an old woman get in and out of a car. It is trouble to make Johnny use the right fork when he wants to pig it. You have to tell Sam a million times not to speak with his mouth full; not to wear his hat in the house; not to neglect a thousand little courteous observances. It takes time upon time and precept upon precept and being everlastingly on the job to teach children good manners.

A famous psychologist once estimated that it requires two years' hard work to teach children good manners, but in the end great is the mother's reward. She has given her children the greatest charm they can possibly possess and she has laid the foundations of their success.

Next, teach your children how to get along with other people. On our ability to smooth the fur of our fellow creatures the right way and make ourselves persona grata to them depends our happiness in life. Popularity isn't the reward of vanity. It is what makes us or breaks us. People will do things for us because they like us that they wouldn't do for us to save our lives. And, if they dislike us they will pull us down every time we get a foothold on the ladder of success.

Most mothers are by way of thinking that if a child has a cantankerous disposition there is nothing that can be done about it. It is just to bad that Johnny always quarrels with the other children and every game he is in breaks up in a row. And Mother sighs instead of getting busy making Johnny play fair and give and take, and not assume the right to run the whole show.

DON'T RAISE A MISFIT I have known any number of competent men and women who could never hold a good job because they could not get along with the other employees. I have known many professional people whose careers were wrecked because they were always saying or doing something to offend their best clients. And we all know that at the bottom of every unhappy marriage is the wife or husband who has never learned the art of getting along with people.

The shrimpy umpire, watching the pitch sizzle across the corner, yelled "Two!" "Two what?" snarled the catcher, smashing his mask into the umpire's face. "Yeah, two what?" growled the
