ELLEN'S DIARY

Harvest Moon Is Gone

Today was warming sunlight and wavering shadows, and a smart breeze in the treetops and along the fields. It was stubble and drifting leaf... and the farmlands held fast in October's wistful wizardry. It was a day as are these of Autumn's own, for folks in rural places to be especially grateful for the fullness of season with which the year has gifted them.

These golden days when the air is full of the sounds of seasonal activity, and the fields along valley and hill present engaging scenes of the harvesting, then it we ever should "think on these things," ours the labor? Ours the long hours of work? Yes, but not ours... lent only the given, the showers and the sunshine, the heat and the dropped refreshing dew, without which the farmers' labor is vain.

"I believe" James commented at dinner "if everything goes well with us, we'll finish her this afternoon-have every last sheaf gathered and threshed and the straw baled."

Jamie and Gage were our "working-guests" then Gage blessed with a merry heart, carefree and generous, and Jamie our eldest grandson a trust-worthy lad, mature for his years and... "Why Nanna!" Granddaughter exclaimed when she chanced to notice it, "do you know that Jamie is taller than you He's really tall, isn't he?" she smiled. Yes tall, with the years taking no time at all so it seems to grow up the two.

We walked back, through the afternoon, to catch sight of the last of our harvesting, to a field beyond the maple woodlands where the threshing and baling was in progress. If the endeavor is by this familiar to us-the machines, and busyness and pulse of it all, we climbed to a sheltered bale of the heap to look out upon it again. Mack whose chore it was to lift the odd dropped sheaf to Rob, to whom this year goes the credit of feeding every sheaf of this harvest to the thrasher, put aside his grain-fork and came up to be our companion there.

"It's a nice way to thresh" he offered with a satisfied smile. "do you notice that the blower is taking the straw directly into the baler? There! Did you hear that sound? That means that another bale is made and tied See how the next one in the making pushes it out of the way? It took brains, I'd say, to figure out a machine like that."

Now the empty sheaf-wagon moved away from the thrasher and another heaped high drew quickly into its place, giving dome of the fieldworkers a brief respite.

Hot Meal, A Job, Companionship, Cheer Old Souls

TORONTO (CP) — A new lease on life is offered elderly or disabled women at two neighboring houses on a quiet, downtown street here.

The women are given a simple but useful job of work and provided with a hot, midday meal.

The service is organized by the women's patriotic league, originally formed in 1914 to aid dependents of soldiers overseas. But more recently, it has taken on a different type of welfare work.

Director Mrs. Henrietta Kirkness says the meal, the work and the companionship work wonders.

"They come here looking as though life held nothing for them and in a few weeks, their faces light up and they are much more relaxed and happy," she says.

Progress Report Of Courageous Dieter

By IDA JEAN KAIN

The amazing story of how a young woman with unwavering faith is taking off a tremendous amount of weight was started in yesterday's column. On April 6, Jean resolutely began the pattern of eating that all in good time will reduce her weight from 410 pounds to healthy normal. Here is the most heartening story it has ever been your dietitian's privilege to participate in and report.

At the end of the first month of protective dieting, our model had reduced 20 pounds. In the following three weeks she lost another 10 pounds, making the total 30 pounds off. On June 27 came this report:

"Wonderful things have been happening to me... Life couldn't be nicer Total weight loss to date is 47 pounds, and to say I'm happy is putting it mildly. I am now working three days a week. This keeps me busy and contented and keeps my mind off food. Also, it gives me some self-confidence."

"I have now officially joined tops and all the club members encourage me. As you suggested, I went to the doctor for a complete checkover and now see him twice a month."

"Friends who haven't seen me in some time comment on the loss. Other ask where I have lost the 47 pounds, but that doesn't bother me. I can tell it myself and that's what really counts."
