

A HEAVY BURDEN.

Rather a heavy burden, isn't it, my boy? Clarence Spencer, to whom the words had been addressed, turned from the ledger, and looked toward the speaker. Clarence was a young man—not more than 25—and he was a book-keeper to Solomon Wardle, a pleasant-faced, keen-eyed man of about 50, who had spoken.

"A heavy burden, isn't it?" he replied.

And still the young man was silent. His looks indicated that he did not comprehend. He had been for some time bending over the ledger, with his thoughts far away; and that his thoughts were not pleasant ones was evident enough from the gloom on his handsome face.

"My dear boy, the burden is not only heavy now, but it will grow heavier and heavier the longer you carry it."

"Mr. Wardle, I do not comprehend you."

"Ah, Clarence!"

"I certainly do not."

"Didn't I call at your house for you this morning?"

Clarence nodded assent.

"And didn't I hear and see enough to reveal to me the burden you took with you when you left? You must remember, my boy, that I am older than you are, and have been through the mill. You find your burden heavy, and I've no doubt that Sarah's heart is as heavily laden as your own."

And then Clarence Spencer understood; and the morning's scene was present with him, as it has been present with him since leaving home.

On that morning he had a dispute with his wife. It had occurred at the breakfast table. There is no need of reproducing the scene. Sufficient to say it had come of a mere nothing, and had grown a cause of anger. The first had been a look and a tone; then a flash of impatience; then a raising of the voice; then another look; the voice grew higher; the reason was unhinged; passion gained sway and the twin lost sight of the warm enduring love that lay smitten and aching down deep in their hearts, and felt for the first time only the passing tornado. And Clarence remembered that Mr. Wardle had entered the house and caught a sight of the storm.

And Clarence Spencer thought of one thing more; he thought how miserable he had been all the morning; and he knew not how long his burden of unhappiness was to be borne.

"Honestly, Clarence, isn't it a heavy and thankless burden?"

The bookkeeper knew that the employer was his friend and that he was a true-hearted christian man; and, after a pause, he answered:

"Yes, Mr. Wardle, it is a heavy burden."

"My boy, I am going to venture on a bit of fatherly counsel. I hope I shall not offend."

"Not at all," said Clarence. He winced a little, as though the probing gave him a new pain.

"In the first place," pursued the old man, with a quiver of emotion in his voice, you love your wife?"

"Love her? Yes, passionately."

"And do you think she loves in return?"

"I don't think anything about it—I know."

"You know that she loves you?"

"Yes."

"Then you must admit that the trouble of this morning came from no ill-feeling at heart?"

"Of course not."

"It was but a surface squall, for which you, at least, are heartily sorry."

A moment's hesitation, and then—

"Yes, I am heartily sorry."

"Now, mark me Clarence, and answer me honestly; don't you think your wife is as sorry as you are?"

"I cannot doubt about it."

"And don't you think she is suffering all this time?"

"Yes."

"Very well. Let that pass. You know she is bearing part of the burden?"

"Yes, I know that."

"And now my boy, do you comprehend where the heaviest part of the burden is lodged?"

Clarence looked upon his interlocutor wonderingly.

"If the storm had all blown over, and you knew that the sun would shine when you next entered your home, you would not feel so unhappy?"

"Clarence assented."

"But," continued Mr. Wardle, "you fear that there will be gloom in your home when you return?"

The young man bowed his head as he replied in the affirmative.

"Because," the merchant added with a touch of parental sternness in his tone, "you are resolved to carry it there."

Clarence looked up in surprise.

"I—I carry it?"

Fever and Ague.

Are you troubled with Ague, Chills and Fever, Bilious Fever, Remittent or Intermitting fever, Night Sweats or any disease that comes from Malaria or disordered Liver and Hot Sums? If so, procure a bottle of Green's Ague Conqueror, which is an acetic extract of strong tonic roots, combined with Sulphate of Magnesia, etc., and positively contains no Quinine, Arsenic or other poisons. It purifies the blood, cleanses the liver, spleen and other secretive organs so effectually that the chills will not return. We have never found any case of Fever and Ague it will not cure. Price 50 cents and $1.00 per bottle. One large bottle has cured as many as five in one family. Sold by all druggists and dealers everywhere.

A Good Account.

"To sum it up, six long years of bed-ridden sickness and suffering, costing $200 per year, total $1,200—all which was stopped by three bottles of Hop Bitters taken by my wife, who has done her own housework for a year since, without the loss of a day, and I want everybody to know it for their benefit."
