These two bonny Scotch lassies, who are among the few exponents of this type of entertainment, attracted considerable attention when they appeared at the 1952 Edinburgh Film Festival. It was at Disney's invitation that they appeared in this high spirited film.

Mouth music originated in the Hebridean Islands more than 800 years ago when local inhabitants sang it to accompany the dancers when no bagpipers were available. In "Rob Roy," Kitty and Marietta MacLeod sing the jigs and reels for the dancers at a Scottish wedding party following the marriage of Richard Todd and Glynis Johns.
