Amplifier Troubles Hit Cooper Capsule

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP)—Problems with an electronic amplifier caused the electronic failures which forced astronaut Gordon Cooper to fly his spacecraft back to earth manually, space agency officials reported here today.

The faulty part is a small box called Amp Cal, for amplified calibration, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said. Its purpose is to control electrical signals of different spectral sensors—such as gyroscopes and infrared horizon scanners—into commands to fire the hydrogen peroxide jet thrusters in the automatic control system.

During the 19th of his 22 orbits last week, Cooper told the 05G light was on. The light was not to have flashed until the capsule retro-rockets fired and the craft had begun re-entering the atmosphere.

The light tells the astronaut that he has begun to encounter the first signs of gravity after leaving the world of space weightlessness.

Cooper conducted a series of tests which indicated his automatic control system had failed down to the point where the 05G light normally would come on. That meant the automatic control system would not position his capsule for re-entry and fire the retro-rockets. He would have to perform these functions manually.

As Cooper neared the end of flight, he reported to the ground that the two inverters—changing alternating current to direct—which serve the automatic control system had malfunctioned. He had thought the automatic controls would work after the normal 05G point was reached but now they could not be relied upon for any of the re-entry

Funeral Scheduled Today For Prominent Cameraman

TORONTO (CP) — Funeral services will be held today for Fred Davis, 63, the cameraman who took the first pictures of the D'Amboe quintuplets. He died Monday night on the eve of the fourth surviving quintuplet of 20th birthday.

He suffered a heart attack in January, but recovered and returned to operate his business, Canada Pictures, a commercial photography firm of which he was co-owner. He suffered a further seizure during the weekend.

Davis, a prominent newspaper cameraman with several photographic studios to his credit already, was sent by the Toronto Star to Callander, Ont., shortly after the birth of the quintuplets May 28, 1954.

Besides sending back the first photos of the quintuplets, he became a fast friend of Dr. Allan Roy D'Amboe, a country physician who attended the quintuplets' birth. When the quintuplets were placed under official Ontario guardians, Davis was appointed official photographer. His syndicated photos were sent around the world for the next 5½ years.

In a mine disaster at Moose River, N.S. where three men were trapped underground in a gripping drama in 1956, Davis scooped the world by paying a miner to lead him underground for pictures of the rock fall that had imprisoned the men.

IODE Chapters Asked To Boost Aid To Indians

By PATRICIA RUSAK

VICTORIA (CP) — Chapters of the Imperial Order Daughters of the Empire were asked Tuesday to increase their work and assistance for the native Canadian Indians.

Mrs. R. Douglas Jennings of Toronto, national immigration and citizenship convener, told the national chapter's annual convention although the order now has many projects for the Indians, "it is still not enough."

Jennings said the native Indians "need assistance in many ways"—especially those who come to large cities not geared for the speed of city life.

The IODE brief presented to the citizenship and immigration minister last year requesting a three-to-five-year government study of all aspects of Indian life will again be brought to the attention of the new federal minister, she said.

GIVEN CLOTHING

Mrs. Jennings reported that IODE chapters in every province sent clothing, furniture, toys and games to Indians on reserves last year.

"The work for Indians in Saskatchewan has been outstanding," she said and explained that one of the order's main projects in that province was the distribution of books and other reading material to the reserves.

IODE members in Quebec assisted in a government census of Indians living off reserves and in New Brunswick, members paid regular visits to Indian families and hospital patients.

Mrs. Jennings asked IODE members to continue their friendships with immigrants over the years.

Following her report, Mrs. Jennings, a member of the IODE's Queen's Own Rifles chapter in Toronto, was presented with a life membership in the order.

More than 400 national, provincial and municipal delegates are attending the five-day meeting which ends today.

Home, School Consider TV

WINNIPEG (CP) — Television programming came under the scrutiny of the Canadian Home and School and Parent-Teacher Federation Tuesday.

Delegates to the federation's annual meeting here agreed to request that the CBC shuffle its program schedule to bring restricted television to elementary school children.

The proposal was one of 14 resolutions on the agenda of the group's five-day annual meeting.

The federation tabled for study and better definition a resolution calling for the CBC and CTV to conduct "an investigation of television programs to eliminate burlesque, spurious violence which tend to teach children."

The motion was tabled pending an acceptable definition of burlesque.

Two other resolutions commending the CBC on its programs for school and pre-school children were approved.

Is a jail sentence news?

Most of the time, the answer is "yes". Newspapers report crime because it is in the public interest.

Without crime reporting, you would get only part of the day's news. Criminals could continue to break the law in a cloak of secrecy. Potential criminals, ignorant of the courts' action against offenders, would not be deterred.

Most known criminals shun publicity. Publicity is one of the law's most powerful weapons in its fight against crime. For, if the public is uninformed, there can be no public pressure to stamp out crime.

Wrong-doing, on any scale, cannot withstand the pressure of newspaper-aroused public opinion. To suppress news about crime, doesn't suppress crime! Consider this when you read a newspaper report of a crime or a jail sentence. You'll know that your daily newspaper is acting in your best interests—as always.
