BURGESS BEDTIME

about in the past there had been no strangers wandering about in the Old Pasture; they never had had even to think about traps there. But while he had been away there had been both strangers and traps. That was why she had been planning to move. That very morning she had found and sprung a cruel steel trap there in the Old Pasture. It had been cunningly set in one of the paths she and Reddy often used. She had discovered it, uncovered it, sprung it and scornfully left it lying in the path for all who came that way to see. They heard Farmer Brown's boy coming up an old cowpath. Had it been any one else they would have taken to their black heels and vanished among the bushes. They didn't do this now. No, sir, they didn't run away. They moved back a little way and stood side by side in plain sight hardly a stone's throw from their doorway. "I wondered if I would find you still here," said Farmer Brown's boy. He spoke in a low gentle voice. Of course those Foxes didn't understand a word of what he said, but they did understand the friendliness of that voice.

"You do remember me, don't you? And we still are friends, aren't we?" continued that friendly voice. Reddy and Mrs. Reddy grinned more broadly than before, just as if they understood. If they had I am sure they would have wondered how he could ask such foolish questions.

Reddy put his black nose close to one of Mrs. Reddy's pointed black ears. Perhaps he whispered to her. It looked that way. They turned and disappeared among the bushes. Farmer Brown's boy waited. Presently he spied Reddy's sharp face peeping around a rock at him. Reddy dodged back out of sight. He barked softly. Farmer Brown's boy waited. Reddy peeped around the rock again and dodged back. Once more he barked softly. "I do believe he is barking to me, wants me to follow him," thought Farmer Brown's boy.

He did, moving slowly and quietly, stopping often to look and listen. Now and then if he stopped too long Reddy would return and show himself for an instant. So at last Farmer Brown's boy rounded a big rock and there in the path lay an ugly cruel steel trap.

Farmer Brown's boy understood. His face darkened. "So that's it!" he exclaimed. "It was harsh and angry. 'It is time I got home.'" Reddy and Mrs. Reddy would have agreed to that had they understood it.

MENTAL HEALTH WEEK MAY 1-7th.

THESE ARE SOME OF THE CHARACTERISTICS OF PEOPLE WITH GOOD MENTAL HEALTH.

THEY FEEL RIGHT ABOUT PEOPLE.

They are able to love and to consider the interests of others. They have personal relationships that are satisfying and lasting. They expect to like and trust others, and take it for granted that others like and trust them.

They respect the many differences they find in people. They do not push people around, nor do they allow themselves to be pushed around.

They can feel they are part of a group. They feel a sense of responsibility to their neighbors and fellow men.
