

Mrs. Frank Good, recognized as an authority on cooking, uses and recommends Fleischmann's Yeast.

Repeats Baking Successes at 1951 Stanley Fair

Over the years at Stanley's century-old fair, a goodly crop of top awards for baking has come to Mrs. Frank Good, of Stanley, N.B. In 1950 she received the further honor of being named "Most Worthy Settler" for the year, in recognition of her services to the community. "Certainly it takes experience to be a good cook," says Mrs. Good, "but it also takes the best ingredients. For example, you have to use a good reliable yeast to get top results for rolls and bread. I myself use Fleischmann's Yeast . . . Fleischmann's is so active and dependable."

That's where they all agree! Prize-winning cooks say that Fleischmann's Yeast simply has what it takes to give you perfect risings each time. No wonder it's been the favorite with Maritime women for over 80 years!

CHAPTER TWO Part One

"Never mind. I used to be a lawyer at one period of my long life and I know what I'm doing. Isn't there someone else—anyone who can read and write will do?" Janet felt bewildered and a little hurt. "There's Charlie the elevator man on night duty. I don't want to arouse any of the other patients."

"No need to, Charlie will do fine. Get him, Janet, and bring all three of them here at once."

As she left the room she heard him emit a dry, smug little chuckle. Dr. Eynon had returned from the laboratory. He and Cliff Bronson were standing facing each other and the shaded night light threw their features into queer gargoyle silhouettes against the ceiling.

Janet Harris was still puzzled over old Mr. Hartigan as she made her way to the operating theater the next afternoon.

She had asked Dr. Eynon and Cliff to come into his room last night along with Charlie, the elevator man. The two doctors understood at once that it was better to humor the old gentleman and they signed their names and addresses at the bottom of the document. Charlie doubted if he knew what it was all about.

Mr. Hartigan's frail, claw-like hand shielded the rest of the paper so none of them saw the terms of the will. It was all very mysterious.

When she had stopped in to see him a few hours ago he had grinned up at her mockingly . . . "Still hanging on," he chuckled. "Except for a faint blue tinge around his withered old lips, he looked unchanged and she felt unreasonably glad."

"Won't you let me call your lawyer now, Mr. Hartigan?"

"I suppose you'd better," he agreed amiably. "The deed is done. All that remains is for J. D. to put it in the phraseology of the legal profession."

She had laughed then. "I am afraid he's going to be annoyed with you."

He chuckled dryly. "Small doubt of it." Then his features stiffened and grew stern. "I'm in my right mind, Janet, and this is my last will and testament—don't ever let anyone persuade you otherwise."

His tone had been so vehement that she had said, "What do you mean?"

But he had refused to explain further.

She had phoned J. D. Prentice and even now the prominent lawyer was closeted with Mr. Hartigan.

She moved down the corridor to Dr. Eynon's office. For once the little anteroom was empty of patients and she went on into his office.

He turned to her. "You haven't seen Dr. Bronson recently, have you?"

Her voice echoed her surprise. "Why, yes, I just left him. Why?"

"I was just wondering how he was taking it . . ."

For Cliff's sake she decided to be frank. "To tell you the truth, he's worried to death at not hearing from you and Dr. Windell."

"Then Windell hasn't spoken to him yet?"

"Apparently not."

"Hmm," he studied her solemnly for long seconds, then, "You're engaged to Dr. Bronson, aren't you, Miss Harris?"

"Engaged? No, no, I'm not. Did you think I was?"

What had instilled that idea? Was Cliff trying to give that impression to people?

"I'm afraid I did. In fact, Naomi Farquhar told me as much and I've seen you together so often that I just assumed it was so."

She smiled. "It isn't Cliff Bronson and I are just very good friends—we like to do the same things—but that's all it amounts to."

"Then I can speak frankly to you?"

What did he mean? "Of course, Dr. Eynon."

"About Dr. Bronson's operation yesterday . . . Dr. Windell is going to discuss it with him this afternoon. We've hesitated because it's a difficult thing to explain."

Janet felt uneasy. What was he getting at? Surely Cliff's performance had been faultless.

"Of course I'm not a surgeon," she said, "but I have assisted at hundreds of appendectomies. I thought Dr. Bronson was almost perfect."

He nodded. "Too perfect."

"I don't understand."

"It isn't natural for a doctor to be so calm, so—well, carefree—as his first operation. To put it inelegantly, when a doctor doesn't perspire over a major operation, there's something wrong with him."

Janet glanced down at her fingers. This wasn't so bad; at least Cliff hadn't made some glaring error. "He told me he had stage fright badly before he entered the amphitheater, but that it vanished when he began his work."

"I hope Dr. Windell won't be too severe," she protested. "After all, it's something Dr. Bronson may overcome in a very short time—perhaps his very next operation."

Dr. Eynon stared at her peculiarly. "You may not be engaged to Bronson," his eyes said, "but you certainly think a great deal of him."
