

lice in the murder. The learned counsel then referred to his position. He was away from his business. His seat in Parliament was endangered, but he did not consider that anything if he could succeed in clearing the prisoners from the foul slanders laid to their charge. If he did not succeed the next thing would be that a decent man might unconsciously take a harlot in his house, and she could swear the lives of his whole family away. From the fact of her being a stranger here, the Crown is certainly to blame for not having made a thorough investigation of her character before indicting people on her story, who had been honest, respectable people heretofore, though he felt thoroughly convinced that McCarthy was never murdered, yet he might be wrong; but he being mistaken does not determine the prisoners guilt or innocence. But he felt satisfied the prisoners at the bar were as innocent as himself. He then referred to his cross-examination of Mrs. McCarthy, and said the reason he expressed himself the way he did to Mrs. McCarthy was, that he did not consider it her place to go through the Osbornes' house the way she did, without leave or license.

He (Mr. Palmer) would now call the Court's attention to the circumstances of the case. He did not believe man would murder man without a motive. He could read the secret of the fact, and he wished the jury to follow him in what he considered a fair hypothesis. He could not nor would any reasonable man believe that a mother would commit murder, not only in the presence of her son and daughter, but also get them to assist in that which would secure damnation to their own selves. Such a theory, inference or conjecture is stamped a lie by the God of nature, and will require the most powerful evidence to make him believe it. Then another solution must and can be arrived at. McCarthy takes his horse to the Weldon House when he finds his wife has followed him. He put his horse up for the night with no intention to take him out; then from proof it is evident he intended to go to the Point that night. Then notice his whereabouts at Shediac, showing that he must have been intoxicated and intending to walk to the Point, and the possibility of his head being turned round, and he went up the road instead of down. Here the counsel showed cases of the head being turned off even sober people. It had been said that Chip. Smith was the last man who saw him. Hickey, the watchman, had heard him when he left Smith, step on to the railway. No other person tells of him that night but Annie Parker, whose history he is prepared to prove has been misrepresented by her, and, consequently, her testimony is nothing.

Then, on the 11th of May, McCarthy's body is found floating in the Scadouc, with no mark behind the ear, but a mark on the face, which could be produced by falling into the water. His money and clothes are found on him, proving that money could have been no motive for killing him.

Mr. Palmer then produced the body coat, showing the sleeves and part of the body clear of mud, and said there was evidence, written by the hand of nature, showing that the overcoats could not have been put on after the body had been exposed to mud. He said there had been hair found near the bridge where he believed that McCarthy had fallen off. He did not believe, as some, that one O'Neill had dealt him an unlucky blow and killed him, but he believed candidly as above stated.

He then quoted Russell on crimes, showing that persons acknowledging themselves accessories to a crime could not convict a person on their evidence. He had nothing against Parker, for he might have been the same without moral training as she was, but he hoped she would not be seen any more floating about the streets on luxury as she had been.

Mr. Palmer will continue his address Monday morning.

THE DAILY EXAMINER.

AUGUST 13, 1878.

The Truth.

THE electors of this Province have now an opportunity of showing their hatred of hypocrisy, their detestation of corruption. Four culprits stand at the bar of public opinion—culprits guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors. They are guilty of having done their utmost to rob our young men of their right to vote. They have done their very utmost to support the worst jobbery and corruption that ever disgraced a country. They have upheld the steel rail job and the Goderich Harbor job. They have stood by an Administration which, ignoring our interests, has ruled us as though we were aliens and foreigners. And now the culprits stand for judgment. The least we can do is to send them to their respective homes, where they will be powerless to effect the harm which their incompetency leads them into. While our rights were being infringed, they sat dumb. No voice was raised in our interest while they misrepresented us. And now that these men should come and ask us to condone their past misconduct—nay more—to approve their evil deeds—this is, on their part, the most utter abandonment of decency which ever disgraced the worst political charlatan.

THE schools of this city under the direction of the School Board opened to-day. All the teachers were in their places and the attendance in every department was, we are pleased to announce, large, and therefore satisfactory to the Board and teachers.

Grit Favoritism and Anti-Irish Vote.

W. D. O'DONOUGHUE.

(From Journals of House of Commons, 12th April, 1877.)

Mr. Cartwright moved, seconded by Mr. Coffin, and the question being proposed, that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair; Mr. Costigan moved, in amendment, seconded by Mr. White (Hastings), That all the words after "That" to the end of the question be left out, and the words "in pursuance of the terms of an address, passed by this House on the 13th day of February, 1875, a full amnesty was granted to all persons concerned in the North-West troubles, for all acts committed by them during the said troubles, save only Louis Reil, A. D. Lepine and W. D. O'Donoghue, and a partial amnesty was granted to Louis Reil and A. D. Lepine, conditional on five years' banishment from Her Majesty's Dominion, thereby leaving the said W. D. O'Donoghue as the only person liable to the extreme penalties of the law for all acts committed by him during the said troubles; that this solitary exception has created dissatisfaction among a large class of Her Majesty's loyal subjects of the same nationality as the said W. D. O'Donoghue, and that in the opinion of this House, as all disquiet and fear of disturbances have long since ceased in the North-West Territories, it is just and proper that the said W. D. O'Donoghue be placed in the same position with regard to the said troubles as Louis Reil and A. D. Lepine," be inserted instead thereof;

And the question being put on the amendment, the House divided; and the names being called for, they were taken down as follows:—

So it passed in the negative.

Let it be borne in mind at the polls, in the forthcoming Dominion Election, that McIntyre, Yeo and Perry voted in favor of Louis Reil—the half-bred outlaw—taking his seat in the Dominion Parliament, that he might assist in making laws for the electors of P. E. Island. While they done this, they voted against O'Donoghue being placed in even the same position, with regard to North West troubles, as Louis Reil and A. D. Lepine who were granted partial amnesty on condition of five years' banishment from the Dominion. Sir John McDonald, at a Catholic Picnic recently, said: "The Government had been guilty of the grossest favoritism in refusing to pardon O'Donoghue, who had been guilty of no murder, while they pardoned Biel and Lepine who had been guilty of murder. Poor O'Donoghue was dead now; he had gone to his grave an exile, and he (Sir John) sincerely hoped his family would get the property in Winnipeg which had belonged to him. He received a letter not long ago from Mr. O'Donoghue's brother in Ireland, thanking him for the course he had taken in and out of Parliament in this case, and stating that it had not been expected that a Protestant would have taken such a course."—Com.
