SPECIAL DESPATCHES TO THE EXAMINER.

Ottawa Notes.

OTTAWA, Aug. 17.

Instructions will be issued to collectors of customs to give more strict attention than in the past to the packing and repacking of cheese in bond so as to prevent changes being made in the character of goods and packages in which they are bonded.

Collingwood Schreiber returned to town yesterday. He says the Eastern section of the Cape Breton Railway will be finished in October next, but that the Western section will be a month later, consequently the line will not be open for regular traffic until November.

The Minister of Customs left for New Brunswick yesterday to attend the annual session of the Grand Orange Lodge of British North America.

The French government have sent out a mining engineer to examine the phosphate and asbestos deposits of Canada.

The statistics of last session are now in the binders' hands, and will be on sale to the general public next week.

The Strike Continues.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 17.

There was a large crowd about the New York Central track near the freight bridge across the river to-day. Three freight trains passed during the afternoon, guarded by a squad of Pinkerton men.

To Stand For Gaspe.

QUEBEC, Aug. 17.

It is believed here that Hon. E. J. Flynn, who was defeated in Gaspe, will stand for that County in the next election for the House of Commons.

Broke Her Neck.

MONTREAL, Aug. 17.

While Mr. and Mrs. John Smith, of No. 9 McCord Street, were on a drunken spree this evening, the wife fell down stairs and broke her neck. She died instantly.

Weather Bulletin.

TORONTO, August 18.—10 a. m.

Moderate to fresh south west to north west winds; fair weather; stationary or a little lower temperature.

Personal.

J. Heber Haslam, Esq., is visiting Charlottetown.

Dr. H. D. Johnson and bride have returned from their wedding trip to the United States. Chester B. McNeill, Esq., wife and family, arrived from British Columbia on Saturday night.

Mr. Reuben D. Stavert, of Summerside, left by the St. Lawrence on Saturday morning, on a trip to Omaha, Nebraska, for the good of his health.

It is announced that Sir Morell MacKenzie owing to his recent indisposition, has given up for the present his engagement to lecture America.

Lt. Col. Irwin arrived here on Saturday evening, and is registered at the Hotel Davies. He will inspect Nos. 1 and 2 Batteries of Garrison Artillery this afternoon.

Colonel Worsley, D. A. G., arrived on Saturday evening, and is among the guests at the Osborne House. He and Lt. Col. Irving will assist at the Artillery inspection this afternoon.

Mr. Sandford Fleming is now in London promoting the construction and laying down of an electric cable between Canada and Australia as an alternative to existing lines by the eastern route.

Messrs James R. McKie, A. D. White, R. B. Norton and William Taylor, who were attending the meeting of the Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F., at St. John, N. B., returned home on Saturday evening. They report having a very pleasant time, and speak highly of the manner in which they were treated by their St. John brethren.

The Times says:—Mr. John Henry of Charlottetown, on his way home from a trip to the Northwest, was in Moncton a few days ago, the guest of Ald. Toombs. Mr. Henry stopped in the country round about Calgary and has taken up land in the Red Deer District, which he thinks one of the finest sections of the Northwest. While he thinks none the less of this country, Mr. Henry would advise all who are determined to go West to locate in our own Northwest.

Miss Binney, sister of the late Bishop Binney, of Nova Scotia, died at Margate, England, on the 10th ult. With reference to her the Christian says: She will be sorely missed by all whose privilege it was to know her, poor as well as rich. Her large secret aims were revealed only to One, but it was evident to all that on principle she denied herself the commonest luxuries, and lived more simple than many with one tenth of her means, that she might have the more to impart to others, and this not in schemes of mere philanthropy, but ever on her Father's business, as a steward of His bounty, that she might draw souls to Christ. But what will be missed more than her unostentatious aims, is the sympathy of her tender and feeling heart, responding to every form of sorrow and distress which she met, while the example of her deep piety and life of humble, practical Christianity, will long be a hallowed memory in the hearts of her sorrowing friends.

John Boyle O'Reilly.

The Boston papers are full of obituary notices of John Boyle O'Reilly, editor, orator and poet. The following is what James Jeffrey Roche, associate editor of the Pilot for the past seven years, and one of the close personal friends of the deceased for twenty years, said to a Globe reporter concerning him:

"John Boyle O'Reilly was the dearest friend I had in the world, and after daily and hourly intercourse with him in business during so many years, I can say that my respect and affection every day increased. I am sure that all those who knew him best feel the same. He was a man who won the love of every one he met by his courteous demeanor and general thoughtfulness.

"He was especially endeared to his employees for these qualities. He was as polite to the humblest office boy in the establishment as to the most prominent men whom he met in a social way. He never commanded anything, but always requested with a smile which made it a pleasure to serve him. He was the highest type of the kind, merciful and forgiving man I ever knew, a trait which cannot be better illustrated than by the following incident:

"When he was tried for conspiracy in England, over twenty years ago, a wretched trooper of the 10th Hussars and a fellow-conspirator, turned informer to save himself. He told many things which were utterly false, on the strength of which, largely, Mr. O'Reilly was convicted. After Mr. O'Reilly's conviction the wretched trooper was in execution by his English comrades that in sheer desperation he deserted and came to this country. One day, several years later, he saw the man whom he had betrayed on the streets of Boston. The two men passed without a look of recognition, but the next day the informer entered the Pilot office, and walking up to Mr. O'Reilly, said:

"You don't know me, do you?" "Oh, yes, I do," was the reply; "I would know you anywhere in the world."

"The man told a long story of his wanderings and of suffering for the bare necessities of life. He begged financial assistance of the man whose life he had betrayed, and he did not ask in vain.

"In all the years I have been associated with Mr. O'Reilly I never heard him utter a harsh word concerning any individual who was instrumental in entailing so many years of suffering upon him in British prisons. He hated the system under which they were able to exercise the power, but for the individual he had nothing but forgiveness.

"He had, and with all reverence I say it, the humanity which Christ taught, with mercy and tenderness for all. He hated caste, class and aristocracy, and had no toleration of distinction based on color or race. He was always on the side of the poor and the oppressed. Next to Wendell Phillips he was esteemed by the colored people of the land, and he deserved it, for he was always their true friend.

"While a thorough democrat, he was at the same time the finest gentleman I ever knew. His courtesy came straight from the heart, and was clothed in all the grace of the perfect gentleman.

"It was a liberal education to be near him. As a journalist he was most scrupulous and conscientious. The rule which he both gave to others and followed personally, was 'Never do as a journalist what you would not do as a gentleman.'

"The anonymous in journalism was no protection to him, for he never wrote a line he was ashamed of or did not wish to acknowledge. His capacity for work was wonderful. With a quick decision in everything pertaining to journalism, he had a clear knowledge of what constituted news.

"When he had a lecture or a poem to prepare for some special occasion, as, for instance, the Plymouth celebration, he would shut himself in a room at a hotel, and stay there till the work was done; perhaps for one or two days, as the case might be, and when he came back he would look as if he had been in prison for a month. All his vitality was put into his work.

"His popularity with men in all walks of life was universal, and yet he never sought popularity, either. He was a popular club man, being one of the founders of the Papyrus Club and a member of the St. Botolph, Tavern, Boston Athletic and Press clubs.

"His loss in a literary sense is irreparable, because he was one of those rare literary men who had a steady growth. What he did to day was always better than what he did yesterday. Then his versatility was theme for admiration. When he began to lecture 10 years ago, his friends naturally looked for some evidence of unfamiliarity with the platform, but everybody was surprised at the polished and effective orator they found in him.

"One of the best illustrations I ever saw of the power of his magnetic qualities is contained in the journal of Capt. Hathaway, the New Bedford whaler who rescued Mr. O'Reilly from the Australian penal colony and took him on a whaling voyage. He was a popular club man, being one of the founders of the Papyrus Club and a member of the St. Botolph, Tavern, Boston Athletic and Press clubs.

"Later, while engaged in the whaling fishery, O'Reilly was in a boat which was stove to pieces by a whale's flukes, and as he failed to appear after a reasonable length of time, every one supposed he was killed. But the faithful captain refused to believe it, and would not give up the search till he saw the white face beneath the surface of the water. He was taken on board ship to all appearances dead, but after working over him a long time his friend had the happiness of seeing him revive.

All this is not in the journal, but it shows the esteem in which he was held by his rescuer.

"The interest of the journal lies in the fact that it begins four hours after Capt. Hathaway had transferred his charge to the mail steamer at the Cape of Good Hope, with a reference to 'My dear boy, who has just left me,' and continues for a year and a half with some daily affectionate reference to the young man whom he had so learned to love.

"As a poet Mr. O'Reilly will hold an enduring place among the foremost in American literature not only of his own time, but for all time. Distinctly a poet of thought, he placed form and melody second to the spirit which animated his poetry, believing the body more essential than the clothing. It would be hard to say what is his best poem, though his eulogium on the death of Phillips was certainly one of the finest tributes in the English language."

Mr. Roche in conclusion said that perhaps nothing could better show the nature of the man and the source of affection with which he was regarded by all who knew him than this little poem, written by himself and published Nov. 2, 1889:—

WHAT IS GOOD? "What is the real good?" I asked in musing mood. Order, said the law court; Knowledge, said the school; Truth, said the wise man; Pleasure, said the fool; Love, said the maiden; Beauty, said the page; Freedom, said the dreamer; Home, said the sage;

Fame, said the soldier; Equity, the seer; Spake my heart full sadly; "The answer is not here." Then within my bosom Softly this I heard: "Each heart holds the secret; Kindness is the word."

MAGIC HEALER SALVE.

WEST CAPE, August 4, 1890. MRS. ROSS.—I wish to inform you that your "Magic Healer" Salve has proved a sure cure for Salt Rheum. A young lady residing in my house tested the Salve, and found it the best article she ever tried, after using other Salves without doing any good. I recommended her to try the "Magic Healer," and before using half a box, the Salt Rheum disappeared. I cheerfully furnish the above facts, and remain, yours,
