NEW YORK
LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Assets, January 1st, 1868,
Over Ten Million Dollars

PRESIDENT:
MORRIS FRANKLIN, ESQ.,
Vice President and Actuary:
WILLIAM H. BEERS, JR.

HEAD OFFICE 112 & 114 Broadway, N.Y.
General Agents for the Dominion of Canada:
BURKE & SUMMERRVILLE, Herald Buildings, Montreal.

The New York
Life Insurance Company
OLDEST INSTITUTIONS

Of the kind in America, having been chartered in the year 1816, and commenced business in May 1815.
During the twenty-three years of its existence, it has issued policies upon the lives of more than Fifty Thousand Persons, and has paid in losses $50,000 to the families and representatives of those who have deceased while members of the Company.

Annual Income
EXCEEDS
Four Million Dollars.

A SAFE INVESTMENT.
The instances are many with the experience of every Life Insurance Company, in which the proceeds of a Policy has saved from poverty the survivors of those who have thus made provision for their wants in those of prosperity and health. A wife may insure the life of her husband for her own benefit, and should she survive him, the amount of the insurance will be payable to her free from any claims against his estate; and in case of the death of the wife before that of the husband, the amount of the insurance may be made payable to her children.

THE COMPANY DECLARES ANNUAL CASH DIVIDENDS, which are available in payment of each Annual Premium. All the insured in this Company receive dividends which can be used in part of the second and each subsequent Annual Premium thereafter; or the dividend may be allowed to accumulate, and subsequently used in whole or in part in the payment of Premiums. The business of the Company being PURELY MUTUAL, each member pays only the average cost of insurance, all surplus being annually returned to the Policy holders.
(Companies having a Stock Capital usually retain a large portion for the Stockholders.) The Dividends paid to Policy holders exceed $3,000,000.

Endowment Assurance Policies.
These Policies are coming into general request.
As a sure and profitable investment for one's declining years, they deserve the attention of all.
The sum secured by an ordinary life policy becomes available upon the death of the assured; or the assured himself upon his attaining a specified age, while full provision is made for death occurring prior thereto.

THE NON-FORFEITURE PLAN.
This company originated and introduced the valuable feature known as the Non-Forfeiture Plan which is rapidly superseding the old system of lifelong payments, and has revolutionized the system of Life Insurance in the United States, and which has been adopted generally in a less favorable form by all Life Companies. A party, by this table, after the second year, cannot forfeit any part of what has been paid in.

Tables of Rates, Circulars, Examples of Dividends, Forms, &c., can be had by applying to the Agent, at Charlottetown.

POETRY.

(From the Waverly Magazine)

I Will Think of Thee.

When the morning light approaches, Dispelling the dark night,
Bringing with it joy and gladness, Making earth so calm and bright,
When the birds do sing so sweetly,
Upon every bush and tree,
And my very soul is enraptured, Then, my love, I'll think of thee.

When the evening shades do hasten
To enshroud the light of day,
And one by one the stars do glimmer, Whispering I may be,
And the heavens bright and gay,
And the moon in her splendor,
In her course, so light and free,
With these beauties all to gaze on,
Still, my love, I'll think of thee.

But were these the only moments
That my thoughts referred to thee,
I would do thee great injustice
If I knew thou think'st of me.
In all times and in all places, Wherever I may be,
Caring not by whom surrounded
Still my love, I'll think of thee.

If temptation linger near me,
And it's bitter herb is nigh,
I will think that thou dost see me,
Then temptation I defy.
In thy sweet and holy presence Sin's rebuked and soon doth flee; Dost thou wonder, then, my angel,
That I always think of thee?

Others have professed deep friendship,
But it lasted for a time,
Then it fled, and feckle hearted,
Sought some other soul to twine,
But thy friendship has been truthful,
And I know thou dost love me;
I would prove the most ungrateful
If I would not think of thee.

If I had the pen of genius
I could tell, in many a way,
Of thy virtues, of thy goodness,
But I have not, so must stay,
But no talent great is needed
To express my love for thee,
All I ask of thee, my dearest,
Is, to think sometimes of me.

ROSE TERRACE; OR,
The Trail of the Serpent.

Continued.
Chapter II.

For some time after my parting with papa, mamma treated me with undisguised aversion. Unconscious of my offence I could only bear her displeasure meekly, hoping in time to be taken back into her good graces. Her manner of life was now altered in some particulars; she remained at Rose Terrace the greater part of the day, visiting the city but three hours each morning. At half-past five in the evening she went to London again, seldom returning ere midnight. Her as-semblies were held more frequently than ever, and the early hours of morning were held as high carnival time by her and her guests in my quiet home.

Meanwhile I led a secluded life. From the day of papa's departure I held a decided position in the household—I was elected from "Little Lillian" to "Miss Melville" by the servants, and consulted on all subjects by the housekeeper, butler, gardener, and even coachman and groom, though I always left the latter to follow their own will, as even Miss Evans, my governess, could offer no advice concerning horse-flesh. At first I was a little awed by the new responsibilities. I readily gave accustomed to them, however, and quite understood my position, though I wanted it before mamma who was in reality but my guest—to my humiliation far more than hers, I thought. I could not understand why papa should have arranged matters so strangely, and Sally would never even hazard an opinion on the subject.

Years passed on, and mamma and I,
from dining together day after day grew to be tolerably familiar; her rare beauty I admired as much as ever, and when she deigned to carry on a short conversation with me I was overcome with happiness, and would repeat what she had said, word for word, to Sally my great confidant and confessor. I had often hoped that mamma would, on some occasion, allow me to be present at one of her suppers; but of these she never said a word, and for years I hoped in vain.

I remember my thirteenth birthday as if it were but yesterday. Sally woke me with a kiss and a cordial wish for my happiness.

"My little bairnie is fast going from me, and soon I shall have a young lady in her stead," she said half sadly, as she assisted me to dress. "I'm tempted to wish you back to your babyhood again, lassie, for then you seemed like my own."

"And am I not your own bairn still, dear Sally? Indeed, indeed I shall never love you the less as I grow older! What should I have been but for your kind care?
I can never forget you, dear nurse, whatever befalls me."

She shook her head, but yet looked pleased, and, after bestowing unusual attention upon my toilet, sent me, with a parting kiss, to mamma.

She was lying on the sofa in her dressing room as usual, and turned her head languidly on my entrance.

"Ah, Lillian, is that you? Your visit is earlier than usual, this morning. However, you may be seated."

She did not remember, as Sally had done, that it was my birthday, so by way of apology for my unsummoned presence, I ventured to remind her of the fact.

"Your birthday? Really! so it is. How old are you, child?"

"Just thirteen, mamma."

"Thirteen! Alas—how old you are growing!"

She frowned, and in a few moments surveyed me with much displeasure; then her face grew serene again, and she said cheerfully,—

"Ah! well, no one would suppose you to be more than eight or nine—you are such a tiny little thing. Pass me that handmirror, child."

I did so, and for some minutes she attentively studied her face—her beautiful, brilliant face, which time had left untouched.

"I am a little pale, this morning but I don't look very aged, do I, Lillian?"

"Oh mamma! you are so beautiful!"
It was all I could say in my eagerness, and she smiled sweetly, seemingly well-pleased.

"Well, that is not exactly an answer, but it will do. And now I suppose you would like some birthday gift or token?"

"Indeed, mamma, I never thought of it."
"But you would not be averse to receiving one, nevertheless? Well, we will compromise the matter. To-night, I believe—she consulted her tablets, which lay within her reach—"I receive company; you may appear at the supper-table, if you wish, as a birthday privilege. Will that suit you?"

"Suit me? O yes! I shall be delighted!"
"Very well—that will do. Now run to your play, my dear, for I am very busy."

I bent to receive her cold kiss, and then hopped from the room, almost too happy to speak. But I managed to tell Sally the joyful news, and was dismayed at the look of horror her honest face assumed.

"You go to their supper—you my poor bairnie? God forbid! The woman is mad!"

"Sally! you must not speak so of my mamma! I cried with sudden indignation.
"She knows best what is fit for me."
