

The Seen and the Unseen.

There were watchers by the bedside,
And silence in the room;
There was morning light and shadow,
From a night of troubled gloom;
There were hearts akin to breaking,
There were souls bowed down with grief,
There were drinkings deep from sorrow's cup
In moments all too brief.

There were farewells sad and tender,
In whispers soft and low;
There were waitings for the Messenger
Of measured step and slow;
There were earthly warfare ending,
There was cease from worldly strife,
There were mortals made immortal,
There was death and endless life.

There were watchers by the bedside,
Whose forms we might not see;
There were spirit voices chanting
In sweetest melody;
There was morning light unbreaking
Into Everlasting Day,
When the watchers and our dear one
Went up the heavenly way.

Gymnastics for Girls.

Side by side with the immense strides the intellectual education of women has taken in the last quarter of a century has been a gradual, but somewhat tardy, recognition of the value of systematized physical education of growing girls. Prejudice, however, in spite of the whispered extension of knowledge in regard to the laws of health, still bars the way to physical exercise being placed on anything like a sure footing.

To some, gymnastics for girls means wrenching the arms out of the sockets by means of pulleys and ropes, making the waist unduly thick and the arms alarmingly muscular.

For some systems of gymnastics, and as regards some people, there must be truth in these ideas, but with the application of science to the requirements and capabilities of growing girls, a safe and altogether admirable system has, fortunately, been arrived at. As it is quite novel—the work of a lady who has studied all available systems and brought energy, practical experience, and scientific principles to bear upon her plans—and, moreover, about to become widespread through the opening of a training college, in which girls who desire to become professors of physical education may be fitted for their task, our readers may welcome some account of the system.

It is founded upon a thorough knowledge of the requirements of all the various muscles, the respiratory and laryngeal included. It is to a great extent a connecting link between dancing and so-called "heavy" gymnastics, and it bears much the same relation to both that the Kindergarten system does to higher education. The picturesque element has at the same time been carefully noted; the exercise-dress is pretty, and graceful positions is as much aimed at as the development of strength. It differs from simple calisthenics in that it is much more elaborate training of limbs, trunk and head, as well as hands, fingers, and feet; and it differs from ordinary gymnastics in that no ladders, ropes, horizontal or parallel bars, or jumping-horses are used. Skipping ropes, balls, rings, poles, bar-bells, or light clubs and dumb-bells are about the only accessories required.—Cassell's Family Magazine.

A Future for the Huckleberry

What a wonderful improvement there has been in the various sorts of fruits, large and small! The catalogues are filled with glowing descriptions of new apples, pears, plums, grapes, currants, raspberries, etc., etc. Of strawberries there is no end to the new sorts, and even the lowly cranberry boasts of a dozen or more varieties; but who has ever given a thought to the improvement of the whortleberry, the bilberry of some, and the huckleberry of everybody, and yet more bushels of it are annually consumed than of almost any one fruit. Who so lost to all that is toothsome that he cannot be coaxed into a good humor with a generous piece of huckleberry pie? Will not some of our enterprising horticulturists please try the possibilities of the humble huckleberry? It has been neglected for centuries, and allowed to grow wild on its mountain sides or pine plains, annually robbed of its load of fruit, which it never fails to produce. Let us now see what selection cultivation and the judicious raising of seedlings may do for it! Is there any reason why it should not be as good in flavor as now, and as large as the largest cherries?

Some Advice.

One sometimes sees a drunken man pitched violently from a horse, and when the bystanders rush to the spot, expecting to find him dead, they are astonished to discover that he has been little injured. In his "Scrambles Among the High Alps," Leslie Stephen tells the story of a guide who, while drunk, fell over a precipice so deep that a fall over it seemed almost certain death, and who yet sustained little injury. Stephen accordingly gives his readers the advice either not to fall over a precipice, or to get thoroughly drunk before doing so. The reason of this immunity is that the nerve centres are so much paralyzed in the drunken man as not to be affected by the shock of the fall, which, in a sober man, would have acted upon them so violently as to stop the heart, arrest circulation, and cause instant death.
