An Expert in Stale Lager.

A well known newspaper man was once a witness in the police court in a case in which a saloon keeper was charged with selling lager beer during the prohibition era. Captain Tom Glenn appeared for the defendant. The reporter was placed on the stand for the prosecution. The witness testified to having tasted the beer, which was being sold under the name of "rice beer," after it was brought to the police station and swore to the best of his judgment that it was stale lager beer.

Captain Glenn took the witness and smiled confidently as he asked: "You say it was stale lager beer you tasted?" placing a heavy emphasis on the word "stale."

"Yes, sir."

"Isn't it true that people who drink lager beer always drink it fresh?"

"Yes, sir, that is true."

"Then tell the court how you ever became an expert on stale beer."

The question seemed a clincher, but the reporter composedly replied:

"When I was a youth, my father used to keep keg beer at home in summer, and on account of my age did not allow me to drink it. When the keg became flat or stale, it was rolled under the woodshed and a fresh one put on tap. I would go to the woodshed at the eventide and partake freely of what was left in the discarded kegs. In fact, you might say, Captain Glenn, that I was raised on stale lager beer."

The witness was told to "come down."
