

Happenings of The Week

Authentically-costumed figurines representing the principals in the Royal wedding of Princess Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh have been sent to their daughter's 3 1/2 month old Princess Anne, Mrs. Nina M. Webb of Paris, Ont., made the nine-inch dolls—the bride and groom, bridesmaid Princess Margaret and the two pages, Prince William of Gloucester and Prince Michael of Kent. Mrs. Webb had intended to send the dolls to Princess Elizabeth two years ago after exhibiting them at the Canadian National Exhibition. But she held them back in order to get a first-hand look at the wedding gown, which was scheduled to be exhibited in Canada, in order to perfect the gown of her doll-princess. The other costumes were designed from Mrs. Webb's huge collection of Royal wedding photographs. "I decided to wait until their first child was born, hoping all the time it would be a girl," she said. When Prince Charles was born, she waited for the birth of a girl before sending the dolls as a Christmas present. The doll-Princess is dressed in a white satin gown with a long train containing 114 stars. Satin stars and brilliants adorn the net gown of Princess Margaret and the doll-groom wears blue naval uniform. The pages, holding the train wear kilts and white silk blouses.

That Body Of Yours

By James W. Barton, M.D.

A NEW DRUG FOR EXCESSIVE PERSPIRATION

One of the distressing and embarrassing ailments that afflicts men and women is what is called hyperhidrosis — excessive sweating. Nature intended that we should perspire as perspiration keeps the body cool. However, to have excessive perspiration, even in cool weather when no physical work is being done, develops an inferiority complex, especially in women. Excessive sweating in the hands, feet, armpits and other parts is very troublesome but fortunately, by the use of certain drugs and an occasional x-ray treatment, can be (Continued on Page 3)

DOROTHY DIX SAYS—

Who Rules Roost?

Wife Most Likely To Be Family Dictator

DEAR MISS DIX: Which do you think is the most likely to give in after marriage, the husband or the wife? Which are more tyrannical, men or women?

ANSWER: The generally accepted theory is that the man is the head of the house and that the wife meekly gives in to his wishes and obeys him. But so far as my observation goes in America, at least, it is the wife who rules the roost, and it is the husband who has mighty little to say in the house he supports.

MAN GIVES UP CHURCH

When either party gives up his or her church for the sake of harmony, it is nearly always the husband who does. And, as a general thing, it is the wife's family who camp in the spare room and the wife's people who are helped in time of need instead of the husband's. A hundred times more men support their wives' parents than their own. It is a common thing to see a wife change all of her husband's habits and tastes, but it is a rare thing for a woman to adopt her husband's even when she knows that he is more intelligent than she is. The reason for this is not that men are more easy-going or adaptable. (Continued on Page 3)

ELLEN'S DIARY

By An Island Farmer's Wife

"Yes principles of living should know no change, at least to my way of thinking" this woman whom we visited last evening and who has seen much of life, commented. And her words, reminded us of some lines we had read in an article written by Elizabeth Massey Hill — "Don't Call Me Broad-minded" in a current issue of a magazine. She writes: "All else aside, I fail to see that our society or individuals better or vaunted modern tolerance and easy philosophy have made either society or individuals better or happier. Our parents and grandparents may not always have been as saintly as they pretended but they did have definite standards which they insisted on and lived by, in large part. Religion was large in their lives. And they weren't afraid of inhibiting their children by teaching them to do their duty and strive after goodness. . . . Yet the degree of stability and of human happiness was greater, then, I think, and certainly our present appalling increase in neurotic and psychiatric cases is scarcely an argument for our modern way. We are trying to steer a course without a compass, and it appears to me we are foundering."

It is good in this day and age to find folks unmoved by the easy philosophy of its living — to admire those who believe still in the old-fashioned virtues and standards, as does this small lady whom we visited on last evenings moonlit stroll. She was, we remember the ideal help-mate for "The Doctor" her husband, whose memory is revered in this community and afar. She is small and winsome, and the years have taken a toll in passing, not to lessen her charm, though it has changed soft brown tresses to silver. Would you see her? A tiny erect figure, gowned in black which enhances her fairness. . . . interesting, educated above many who may enjoy their learned theories but know nothing of life as has this woman who has known its mountain-tops of happiness, the tragedy and desolation of its bitter sorrows. . . .

For half a century and more her life was devoted in unstinted measure to the service of the sick and the suffering. Respecting always the line of duty, she knew where illness and death stalked, knew too when the lonely shadows were creeping up on an expectant mother in some quiet farm-house, because she too had babes of her own. "Busy?" she smiled in reply to our query "I suppose I was — though I didn't seem to notice, it much at the time. Sundays were, I remember. . . getting the children off to Sunday School. . . there were the services too. . . yes, I somehow found time to attend both churches — not always, you know, yet quite often. And there were extra meals to be prepared for the Sunday visitors. . . the Minister perhaps, because there was no manse then. . . but the children were good — always willing to help. "There are grown grandchildren now, very dear, to her and precious as are those of ours to us at Alderlea. Heroines indeed though often "unsung" were those wives of country doctors whose practice took them wide distances and along pioneer days. Women of great sympathy, of initiative, of courage and faith, whose names deserve to be written in glowing script among the great of the earth.

"She made a feast of little things, A brown egg in a pretty cup; A candle on a birthday cake; A few stray flowers gathered up And put in an old-fashioned vase. As beautiful as Flemish lace. She made a feast (oh lovely word) Of ordinary common things Of bread and butter — jam and tea. Her home a place where shining wings Hovered above the summer night And touched the roof with tender light." Until Monday — Diary — Good-night. . . .

FIVE PORTS

A very pretty wedding of interest to friends and relatives took place on Wednesday, Nov. 15, by Rev. Joseph McGilivray in Holy Redeemer Rectory when Rachel Emily Collings, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Collings, Sturgeon, became the bride of Gerald Joseph Ready, son of Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Ready, Charlottetown.

Immediately after ceremony a reception was held at the home of the groom at 88 McGill Avenue where a large number of friends assembled. The bride looked charming in a navy Tricotine suit with white accessories and corsage of red roses. The bridesmaid, Miss Ann Johnson, wore a grey suit, with pink accessories and a corsage of pink roses. The groom was attended by his friend, Mr. Louie MacDonald of Charlottetown.

The bride's table was very lovely, covered with lace tablecloth, a center piece of bronze and white mums with tall tapers and a beautiful bride and groom cake. The house was tastefully decorated with chrysanthemum and potted plants.

A toast to the bride and groom was proposed to by Mr. Louie MacDonald and responded to by the groom. Tea was poured by Mrs. W. A. Ready and Mrs. P. J. Rossiter. Miss Hilda Brown ushered the guests. Refreshments were served by Misses Doris and Marion Brown, Louise Rossiter and a number of girlfriends of the bride. Replenishing was taken care of by Mrs. J. J. Mooney. The bride and groom cake was cut in the traditional manner.

The beautiful array of wedding gifts, including china, silver, cut glass, linen, etc., attested to the popularity of the young couple. Prior to her marriage the bride was guest at a shower by her girlfriends. She also received a sum of money from the firm of Clarke Fruit Co. where she was employed, also a walnut table and other beautiful gifts from the staff.

Immediately after the reception the bride and groom amidst showers of confetti left on a motor trip to Maine. All joined in wishing them a very happy wedding life.

The Stars Say -

By Genevieve Kemble

For Tomorrow AN encouraging week-end is forecast for the pursuit of pleasure, for making or renewing friendships, or for more serious contacts for betterment of position. It's a time for welding influential associations for promoting good will and cultivating opportunities. But do this with discretion, and common sense, not letting emotions and feelings be your guide. Over-exuberance of such expression might spoil chances.

If It Is Your Birthday Those whose birthday it is may have opportunities for forging ahead, pleasantly and profitably, provided the approach be not carried by a wave of the emotional, crafty or expedient. A happy and constructive state of affairs may materialize by discretion, tact. A child born on this day is assured a happy and prosperous life from contacts with influential persons, social and in business relations. It may incline to be swayed by its emotions.

Day After Tomorrow The astrological forecast for the day after tomorrow is a conflicting one. While affairs of church, prestige, friendship and popularity are enhanced, there may be a disruptive and disintegrating situation, disheartening and nullifying serious plans, work and ambitious Readjustments seem imperative.

If It Is Your Birthday Those whose birthday it is may enjoy friendship with the mighty, but this recognition may be in the nature of sympathy for a sudden reversal or other token of loss.
