GLADSTONE A FINANCIER.

Clean Record of an Able, Upright and Unselfish Man.

It is not as a politician that we note the departure of Mr. Gladstone from the office of Prime Minister and from public life—not as a politician, but as a political and social economist. The present generation has forgotten most of his life's work, knows naught of what it owes to his labors, and we can but briefly recall the past here. In doing so one general observation may be permitted. Throughout his life Mr. Gladstone has been eminently clean handed. Not only has he never taken a pension for himself from the public purse, but he has never, when not in office, eked out his income by means unworthy of a gentleman and a man of true honesty. He preferred to write magazine articles and books about Homer. Consequently his name is never found among those who "punt" off the stock exchange; no limited liability company ever got him to be a director, nor could a single financier ever conjure with his prestige, because of any selfish interest he might have in view. Mr. Gladstone's very purity of mind and conduct in this and other respects was doubtless a source of weakness to him in practical affairs, and for one thing marks him throughout his career as a bad judge of men. Charlatans could always impose upon him for a time if they were plausible, because the simplicity and uprightness of his mind and life unfitted him for comprehending baser-minded individuals. To no small extent his virtues were the cause of the intense hatred with which so many regarded him, and in this respect his successor is much more favorably placed for the enjoyment of a long and prosperous political career. Lord Rosebery knows all about the turf and the stock exchange, "those dear old English vices." About Mr. Gladstone there has always been something of the ecclesiastic in the best sense, and a good deal of the dialectician and theological casuist. But to us, above all other characteristics of his great personality, stands out dominantly this attribute of cleanness. It is visible, not only in his own life, but in the way he has abstained from quartering his family upon the nation. We remember once hearing about a relative of his who declared with strong language that had he been a complete stranger to the Prime Minister he would have long since had promotion in the fighting service of which he was an humble subaltern. The complaint was, beyond a doubt, justified by the fact, for a scrupulous and noble sense of honor—old-fashioned and rare, always governed the late Prime Minister's conduct in this respect also, as all who care to look at the actual position of his children can see for themselves. Differ from him politically as men may, it is impossible, looking at the facts, for anyone not to admit that in losing Mr. Gladstone's services the nation parts with one of the purest, and, in all that relates to himself and his family, most unselfish men who ever helped to guide its affairs.—London Investors' Review.

SHORT HOURS.

They Result in Invariably Increasing Productive Capacity.

There are still some here and there who seem to believe in the old maxim of Richelieu that workingmen are to be compared with mules, who are less spoiled by work than by repose; but, on the whole, the beneficial effect of reasonable repose is now generally admitted and, according to the Contemporary Review, nobody would think it wise or profitable to return to the very long hours of the early part of the century. And, here again, what is good for one nation has proved good for others; all have alike benefited in productive capacity by abandoning long hours of labor. When Mr. Scott, the eminent Scottish shipbuilder, opened a yard in France, he reduced the hours of the French shipwrights from twelve to ten, and says he found it advantageous so far as he was concerned. Indeed, he raised their wages in consequence from 4 francs a day to 4½ francs, so that they must have done more work in the shorter day than in the longer one. When the hours were reduced to eleven in 1872 in Canton Glarus, the manufacturers prophesied ruin, but obtained 99.15 per cent. of their old production in the first year, and more than their old production in the next. The eleven-hour day was introduced into the rest of Switzerland in 1878, and Dr. Schuler, the factory inspector, extracts the following results from the books of a spinning mill whose machinery was too old to be speeded except very slightly: In 1876-7 in twelve hours the mill produced 372.18 ko. of yarn per 10,000 spindles, but in 1879-80 it produced 388.88. In 1881 the Swiss factory inspector reports a tannery and a watch factory as having voluntarily reduced hours to ten, and having in both cases found the same quantity produced in the day and an improvement in quality. The textile manufacturers of a particular district in Bohemia reduced their hours in 1870, and, while they got at first a little less product in the day, they soon got more than before. M. Freese, window-blind manufacturer at Hamburg and Berlin, who had reduced his hours to nine in 1890 and found the step profitable, reduced them further to eight in 1892, and obtained from a majority of his hands an increase of the quantity produced without any loss of quality.

One of General Wolseley's Secrets.

One of the secrets of Wolseley's success is his being always ready. The Premier of England, having an interview with him one day in London, and giving him command of the army at the Cape of Good Hope, inquired, as they parted: "When can you start?" "By the 4:15 train," answered Wolseley without an instant's hesitation. It was then 1 o'clock. This trait of alertness, together with a wonderful faculty for choosing whatever time and conditions happen to be most convenient for doing his eating and sleeping, have been familiar to his friends since his boyhood. The Rev. Abraham Jones of Hollymount Academy, to whom he went to school, was visited by another ex pupil some ten years ago, and their talk found its way around to Wolseley and his boyish pranks. Mr. Jones recalled to his friend's memory the fact that he had predicted the young fellow's rise in the world. But he added that the end had not come yet. "Garnet will be a Field Marshal one of these days, sir," said he, proudly, "though I shall not live to see it." I wonder if the old gentleman did live through the Queen's last birthday?—Kate Field's Washington.

An Idea of Krupp's.

Krupp, of Prussia, claims as the result of experiments that while only ten to fifteen per cent. of heat units are utilized in the modern steam engine, if the coal is powdered to an impalpable powder and exploded in cylinders, after the manner of an ordinary gas engine, seventy-five to eighty per cent. of the heat units may be realized.

Of course no hope of his recovery could be held out. Within a month, the same friend has received a letter from Mr. Langley stating that he is completely cured of the supposed fatal disorder. Mr. Langley says no medicine did him any good until he began using Dodd's Kidney Pills. These helped him from the first and in the end restored him to perfect health. .....
