Finlay of the Canadian Boy Scouts Association and Mrs. Finlay leave Charlottetown this morning via Maritime Central Airways for Moncton where they will attend a series of Scout functions this afternoon and evening and tomorrow Brunswick to visit such centers as Saint John, Woodstock and Edmundston.

Interviewed last evening upon their return to Charlottetown after a busy afternoon and evening in Summerside, both Mr. and Mrs. Finlay were loud in their praises of the hospitality extended to them by officials and people of Charlottetown during their stay in the Province. Mr. Finlay whilst in the Province delivered several addresses, renewed acquaintances with former banking associates, met many Scout leaders, paid his respects to Provincial, Civic and Town dignitaries and visited both R. Mrs. Steele and Mrs. Burgess introduced the study book for this year which deals with Home Missions.

COMMUNITY IMPROVEMENT
In the Community Improvement contest the three award winners are Marshfield, Hunter River and Freeland, all of whom made great advances. Marshfield, a small community, found time to paint the school, shingling the roof, leveling the playground, providing new fences, a cement walk, and flower garden, to put up new fences around the church and cemetery, to paint the manse and church shed, and to erect district sign posts. Hunter River improved its attractive library, refenced the United Church Manse, ploughed, levelled and seeded its cemeteries. A dozen homes were painted and others were renovated. Freeland improved its school property and the cemetery, as well as ten private dwellings.

Col. Johnstone noted that on its tenth anniversary the Rural Beautification Society had in this year's contest far surpassed all its earlier expectations. The continuing and increasing interest in the improvement of farm homes is most gratifying, and is the admiration of visitors to the province. The developing interest in village and community improvement is a sign.

INCORPORATED VILLAGES

Five incorporated villages entered the village improvement contest, which is a new feature in this year's competition. Top award goes to Cardigan village which made an astonishing improvement in appearance during the summer, the result of an all out community drive. Some 42 private homes and business establishments were improved, some quite extensively.

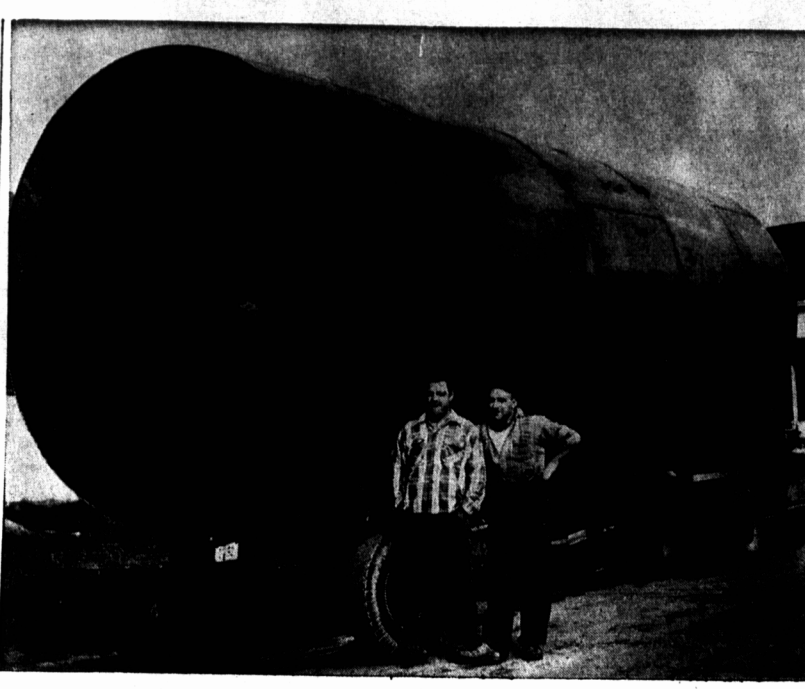

Two churches and attached residences, and church cemeteries were remarkably improved; the Legion hall was renovated and painted, the school redecorated and the grounds landscaped. Both banks of the river by the bridge were cleared of undergrowth, drifted wood and rubbish, levelled and seeded, the bridge painted, poles and fences throughout the village washed and mooring posts painted. A village dump was obtained, bulldozed and used extensively.

The approaches to the village were improved; weeds cut on highway verges and village signs erected. The village obtained fire fighting equipment and a building in which to store it. Mr. Gordon C. Warren in judging the provincial competitions commented, "The people of Cardigan have shown the island villages that a thorough improvement job can be done. Their efforts alone justifies the work of the Society for this year."

Crapaud, a very attractive village, placed second in the contest, and made many permanent improvements. One hundred trees, largely oaks and maples were planted along the main highway, and other approaches to the village were improved. The school, library and United Church were painted, business locations and private homes extensively improved. O'Leary, placing third, had some thirty homes painted, and improvements made to many others. Over a hundred trees were planted and telephone or electric light posts were whitewashed.

LARGE TANK MOVED BY TRUCK

The transportation from Moncton to Summerside of a 12,000-gallon storage tank weighing more than six tons was successfully completed earlier this week by two Charlottetown men, Roy Creed (left) and E. L. Brehaut, who are seen with the tank and trucking equipment beside the White Star Laundry in Summerside, where the tank has been buried in the ground to be used for oil storage by the laundry.

The moving of such a large object presented a most difficult transportation problem and was made without incident.

The tank was "chocked" on both ends which rested on the truck and trailer, and was secured at four points by chains around the tank.

Co-Pilot Tells Story Of 10 Days Awaiting Rescue

EDMONTON (CP) — Gerhardt (Jerry) Lozie, 27-year-old co-pilot who spent 10 days without food on an airplane wing in an icy north-land lake, told his story in a hospital interview Thursday.

The former Dutch navy pilot was brought to hospital here Monday following his rescue from a downed four-engine York transport plane in a tiny Northwest Territories lake 110 miles north of Beaverlodge, Sask.

The Associated Airways Ltd. plane was ditched by its pilot.

Joseph Cermak, 40, when it became lost on its return to Yellowknife, N. W. T. from a distant early warning radar line (freight flight) to the Arctic. Cermak died two days after the plane went down.

Here is Lozie's story, as he told it from the hospital bed where he is recovering from exposure and hunger.

"When we were about 15 minutes from being out of fuel we decided to ditch. Joe, my captain, was looking for a fairly good place to ditch. We had pretty good moonlight and we saw a lake and decided we would put her in there. BELTS FASTENED

"I radioed Yellowknife and told them. We didn't know what lake it was.

"Joe made a beautiful ditch. There were two impacts. On the first, the fuselage broke, and on the second the plane went down right away.

"I got free of my straps and climbed up and opened the astro hatch. Joe was yelling 'Gerry, help me out of here.' His leg was caught by the stick.

"We finally got on the fuselage. Then the plane sank and we had to go on the wing. It was misty and cold. We had no heat and we huddled together as close as possible.

"Next day was sunny. We saw a

Seek To Cut Growing Time Of Oysters In Half

LADYSMITH, B.C. (CP)—Government scientists are trying to cut the growing time of oysters in half by using a new method of raising them in a tank. The idea, which originated in Japan, is to suspend hundreds of wires from rafts anchored off shore. Old oyster shells and cylinders made of a light veneer and covered with a thin coating of cement are attached to the wires. On these objects hundreds of oysters are growing faster than was ever thought possible.

Scientists of the federal fisheries department are trying to cut to half the four years it now takes for oyster seed to grow into a table delicacy.

The idea, which originated in Japan, is to suspend hundreds of wires from rafts anchored off shore. Old oyster shells and cylinders made of a light veneer and covered with a thin coating of cement are attached to the wires. On these objects hundreds of oysters are growing faster than was ever thought possible.

FEEDS CONTINUOUSLY
Oyster seed floating in the water during the spawning season attaches itself to the objects and because the young oyster is in the water 24 hours a day and not subject to tides, it is able to feed continuously, with the result that growth is twice as fast.

The $500,000 oyster culture industry in B.C. was faced with extinction at the end of the Second World War because of a shortage of seed.

But the shellfish laboratory established here in 1949 under Dr. D. B. Quayle has made considerable progress toward making the B.C. industry self-sustaining. Seed for the new experiment comes from B.C. waters.

The main species of oyster harvested on Vancouver Island is the Pacific oyster, larger and sweeter than the eastern Canadian variety found in the Maritimes.

The Pacific oyster displaced Olympia which was almost solely grown until about 1930. Eastern oysters are seldom brought into B.C. because of the heavy costs involved.

Russian Sailors Go For Nylons, Panties And Pens

PORTSMOUTH, England (CP)—sailors bought nylon stockings a rate of five pairs a minute in the store specially set up for them in the dockyard, in 90 minutes the entire stock of 45 dozen pairs of nylons was sold out.

SOCCER TEAMS TIE
This afternoon, a soccer team from the Russian warships tied 1-1 with a team of British sailors.

Two sightseeing parties of Russians spent the day in London and received warm welcomes wherever they went.

Admiral Arseni Golovko, commander of the Soviet squadron and a dozen senior officers drove to Highgate cemetery in north London and placed a wreath of red and white carnations on a plaque recording the burial place of Karl Marx, who wrote "Das Kapital," the Bible of Communism.

In Leningrad when buses carried the sailors on sightseeing tours, Russian youths banged on the windows, asked for cigarettes and shouted, "How do you like Leningrad?"
