Drug Prices
Said Rigged
By U.S. Firms

WASHINGTON (AP) The U.S. Federal Trade Commission has ruled that Chas. Pfizer and Company, Incorporated, used unfair methods to obtain a patent on an antibiotic and that the set stage for monopoly and price-fixing in a $100,000,000 market.

Reversing a hearing examiner's decision, the commission said prices of tetracycline, probably the leading antibiotic on the market, were rigged by Pfizer, American Cyanamid Company, Bristol-Myers Company, Bristol Laboratories, Incorporated, Olin Mathieson Chemical Corporation (Squibb) and the Upjohn Company.

Spokesmen for Pfizer, Cyanamid and Bristol Laboratories denied the charges and said the ruling would be appealed to the courts. In case of appeal, the commission's order would be delayed until after final court action.

The commission said sales of the drug involved might run substantially more than $1,000,000 over the 17-year life of the Pfizer patent.

ORDERED TO CEASE

The commission ordered the companies to cease any conspiracy, exchange of information, or other acts designed to set prices of antibiotics.

The five companies' attorneys agreed on the general finding in the case, although commissioner Philip Elman thought the commission should revoke Pfizer's patent privileges and commissioner Sigurd Anderson held that the cease-and-desist order should not have covered all antibiotics.

The ruling said both Cyanamid and Pfizer either withdrew information or gave false information in proceedings before the patent office.

At one point, Cyanamid withdrew its contest of Pfizer's patent, Cyanamid holds a patent on chlorotetracycline, known as aureomycin, another valuable antibiotic and one from which tetracycline can be produced.

Commissioner A. Leon Higginbotham Jr., wrote in the commission's main opinion that the record showed price uniformity, identical bidding and identical dosage forms, coupled with frequent contacts among the firms including the exchange of up-to-date price lists.

Commando Suspected In Robbery

By TOM OCHILTREE

LONDON (AP) — Detectives striving for a solution to history's greatest train robbery are considering the possibility that a former military man directed the raid and may have spent a year planning the details.

This mastermind may even have led Britain before the well-dreaded bandits halted the Glasgow-London mail train early Thursday and made off with £2,360,000 ($7,707,000)—most of it in easily spendable pound notes.

During the weekend an army of policemen, detectives and scientists scoured the scene of the crime near Cheddington, 40 miles north of London. They had a truck in their possession which may have been used by the gang.

Foot by foot they reconstructed the action and examined every trace left by the gang. Tracker dogs were used. But to crack the case police officials believe they must identify the man who planned the job. Everything points to a criminal operation organized with the attention to detail of a wartime commando raid.

CALLS POUR IN

Rewards totalling £260,000, tax-free, brought a flood of telephone calls to Scotland Yard. A few may have produced valuable information.

The injured driver of the train, Jack Mills, 37, said the raid was conducted with military precision. Speaking to reporters at his home in Crewe, he explained:

"No orders were given. Everyone had his own station and knew his particular job."

"There must have been railway men among them, in my opinion, to enable them to un couple the coaches. From what I could see there must have been inside information given."

After halting the train by tampering with the black signals, the bandits uncoupled the train between the second and third coaches. They made Mills take the front part of the train along the line to the lonely spot where 110 mail bags filled with old paper currency were tossed out and loaded into a getaway vehicle.

Mills fought with the first bandit who appeared on the engine and out of the pre-dawn darkness and nearly threw him to the ground. Then Mills was beaten around the head by a masked man carrying a long bar wrapped in white cloth. He was kept in a hospital three days before being allowed to go home.

GREW QUICKLY

Up until the earthquake of July 26, 1963, the city of Skopje, Macedonia, was growing rapidly and had a population of 300,000 compared to 20,000 in 1948.
