Millions Of Dollars Ride On Probe Of 'Favoritism'

By G. MILTON KELLY

WASHINGTON (AP) — Millions of United States taxpayer dollars ride on the outcome of a Senate investigation of possible favoritism in the defence department's award of a huge contract for a new experimental fighter plane.

Involved is an outlay now estimated at $6,300,000,000 to develop and produce for the air force and the navy a versatile new plane — the TFX. TFX stands for tactical fighter, experimental.

The TFX would pack a nuclear as well as a conventional weapons punch. It could fly anywhere in the world in one day, at speeds up to 1,700 miles an hour.

The contract now in dispute is one of the biggest ever let, dwarfing the $5,700,000,000 cost of running the whole federal government in 1933.

Senator John L. McClellan (Dem., Ark.) and his senate investigations subcommittee are exploring testimony that the defence department's civilian bosses rejected a design promising a cheaper, better plane when they awarded the contract to the General Dynamics Corporation of Fort Worth, Tex., last fall. The Boeing Company of Seattle, Wash., was the unsuccessful rival bidder.

In cold anger, Defence Secretary Robert McNamara denied the charge in a sworn statement to the subcommittee. He blasted at the investigation as having "needlessly undermined public confidence and judgment of the highest officials" in his civilian administration of the military establishment.

SPEEDIER DELIVERY

The facts, McNamara said, are that the General Dynamics design promises a better plane, in shorter time, and at a potential saving of $1,000,000,000.

Witnesses, some of them his subordinates, had testified that military evaluation indicated Boeing's design promised many advantages as a tactical weapon, and would cost something between $91,000,000 and $415,000,000 less than the General Dynamics version.

Tough, personable and articulate, McNamara has fought and won many a previous battle on this same issue. He has managed even to outgeneral Congress on such issues as reorganization of the U.S. National Guard and whether to put the giant B-70 bomber into production. The latter he refused to do even after Congress voted the money and demanded that he do it.

WINNING WAYS

Until about a year ago McNamara, former head of Ford Motor Company, was viewed as something of a fair-minded boy by powerful members of both political parties. He had an almost perfect score in winning controversies that came to public attention.

When the chips were down, President Kennedy backed him to the hilt.

He still has many influential friends in Congress. But more and more they speak of disenchantment with his policies, and with the advisers who surround him.

If General keeps the contract, it plans to do the work in Texas, vice-president Lyndon B. Johnson's home state.

Representative K. W. Stinson (Rep. Wash.), in a House debate, stopped short of making any direct allegations but said that around the Pentagon the TFX is "sometimes known as the LBJ aircraft"

In the background of the TFX fight is the question of how much unification is possible or desirable in the armed services and their procurement programs.

The military balked when McNamara first proposed TFX to be devised as a plane capable — with some modifications — of serving both the air force and the navy.

Both services finally embraced the idea as evaluation convinced them either the Boeing or General Dynamics design really could produce such a versatile craft.

GOOD POINTS LISTED

There has been unchallenged testimony that military evaluation rated the General Dynamics design as promising higher supersonic speed, and the Boeing design as promising more firepower, longer flying range, ability to land in shorter distances on makeshift landing fields, and at lower cost.

McNamara called this only part of the story. He contended that, essentially, General Dynamics had met the goal required—to design a plane which, with minimum modifications, could operate from air force installations or from navy carriers. He said Boeing had come up with essentially two different planes, and this would add to tooling-up costs.

U.S. Awaits Comment On Matter Of Bomarc

WASHINGTON (CP) — U.S. authorities said here a copy of Defence Secretary Robert McNamara's testimony including his statement that Bomarc bases are useful to draw enemy missile fire was turned over to the Canadian government more than a week ago for possible comment. There was none.

These authorities said the U.S. government sometimes takes this action when policy of another government may be involved in testimony and it was done in this case to give the Canadian administration an opportunity to make some comment if it desired before testimony was made public.

McNamara delivered his remarks over a period of time from Feb. 6 to Feb. 13. The censored transcript made public Friday showed that Feb. 13 he informed the congressional appropriations defence subcommittee in a closed-door hearing that he would eliminate the Bomare anti - aircraft missile bases "if there were any real amount of money to be saved."

COST MINIMAL

However, since the eight Bomarc bases in the U.S. cost only $20,000,000 a year to maintain, he would retain them for the next several years because "I think we are getting our money's worth."

At the very least, he argued, the Bomarcs "would cause the Soviets to target missiles against them and thereby increase their missile requirements or draw missiles on to these Bomarc targets that would otherwise be available for other targets."

Australia in recent years has been increasing its gross national product seven to eight per cent each year.

It is not uncommon for declarer to be playing a contract where he appears to have bitten off more than he can chew. Usually, the declarer can do nothing to salvage such contracts, but there are occasions where careful play can turn apparent defeat into victory.

Here is such a case. South is playing five spades doubled and West leads his singleton diamond. Declarer sees that the probable losers are two diamonds and a club, but he also notes that if either opponent was dealt three hearts to the queen, he can save a trick and make the contract by ruffing one of dummy's hearts.

Accordingly, he wins the opening lead with the ace of diamonds, cashes the A-K of spades and A-K of hearts, and enters dummy with a trump to lead the nine of hearts and ruff it.

The queen does not fall when he ruffs, but that doesn't mean that South is all out of ammunition. He still has another chance to make the hand which it costs him nothing to try. He leads the jack of clubs at this point.

As the cards lie, East wins the trick with the king and then makes the best defensive play of continuing with the ace. Declarer ruffs in dummy and plays the jack of hearts, East showing out.

South takes advantage of this favorable development by discarding one of his diamond losers on the jack of hearts. Declarer can afford to make this play, since he has two diamond losers in any case, and it furthermore gives him the opportunity of making the hand, if, as seems possible, East was dealt a six-card diamond suit.

This turns out to be a lucky shot because West, upon winning the heart with the queen, is forced to return a club. Declarer naturally ruffs the club in dummy and discards his remaining diamond, and thus winds up making the contract as a result of the loser-on-loser play.
