As his pretty wife and child sat on the grass at the R.C.A.F.'s air station at Downsview, Ont., proudly watching his aerial performance, Calgary-born Flight-Lieut. Don Brown of the reserve air force, piloting a Vampire jet plane, plunged to his death in field within sight of his family. Brown, to have celebrated his 31st birthday that day at his home in Toronto, was practising for his participation in the jet air show over the grounds of the Canadian National Exhibition, now under way in Toronto, when the tragedy occurred. According to horrified witnesses, including many children, the jet came in too low, shearing off tops of three pine trees before it crashed. The terrific impact and explosion that followed tore the machine apart, killing its trapped pilot instantly.

Nickel helps save lives too

Hundreds of everyday uses for Nickel have been developed by the Nickel industry through a planned program of research. Today a large share of Canada's Nickel production is being diverted from peacetime uses into channels for preparedness. So the Nickel mine facilities, greatly expanded over the past decade, are again being operated at peak capacity. There is actually more Nickel now being delivered by Canada to the free world than in any peacetime year.

Today important parts of sterilizers and instruments in hospitals are being made of nickel alloys because these alloys provide strength, corrosion resistance, long wear, and a surface that is bright, non-porous and sanitary. For the same reasons, kitchen working surfaces are made of nickel alloys.

Laboratory equipment in hospitals and commercial hotels is made of nickel alloys because these alloys are rust-proof and extremely durable.
