South African PM Will Try Self-Government Experiment

By DENNIS LEE ROYLE

PONDOLAND, South Africa (AP) — About 3,000,000 African tribesmen of Transkei move into a human display window of limited self-government in white-ruled South Africa this fall.

There are rocks around that can smash the window—tribal rivalries, indifference to politics, hostility to the central government, economic problems.

But Premier Hendrik F. Verwoerd's white government is set on giving the Negroes a taste of self-rule. The aim is to try to sell the world on the idea that South Africa's apartheid (rale segregation) policy will work.

Much of the administration in Transkei will be turned over to African civil servants next month. State elections will be held in November. A limited self-governing state will be in operation by Christmas.

Transkei — it simply means "across the (river) Kei"—is a pleasant land of fertile mountains on the eastern shores of South Africa. Its area is 64,000 square miles, about four times that of Switzerland.

AGE-OLD RIVALRY

The people are the Xhosa, divided into numerous tribes with age-old rivalry. The masses leave politics to the tribal chiefs and headmen, who like to saddle their horses and gallop off to political pow-wows.

The people know little about self - government because the chief's word is law — as in ancient times.

The Transkeis get along with the 16,000 whites and 14,000 colored (mixed blood). White hotels, bars and other public places are segregated, but few Xhosas could afford to visit them anyway.

Most Xhosas live in neat, straw-thatched huts clustered in family groups on the lush pasture land provided by the slopes of the towering mountains. They raise cattle and sheep and grow grain. The ox-drawn sled hauls their products to market.

The women still plaster their hair with red clay, as in ancient times and go in for gaudy, beaded headgear. They deck arms and legs with dozens of heavy silver, brass or copper bangles.

There are more than 800,000 Xhosa men and women registered for the legislative elections in late November.

The Africans, however, will dilute much has already been decided for them. They will elect only 45 of the 109 members of the legislative assembly. The other members will be 64 tribal chiefs, automatically elected. Critics say these chiefs are nothing but white government stooges.

RIGHT TO VETO

Furthermore, President Charles R. Swat of South Africa can veto any act of the legislature.

The South African government retains control of defence, foreign affairs, roads, railways, ports and immigration. Six white government administrators will head various state departments and assist in training Africans for state jobs.

Transkei will have its own flag and anthem and the official language will be Xhosa.

Political turbulence centres around the scores of tribal chiefs and hundreds of headmen — all having their own views on how the state should be governed.

Four paramount chiefs form the political nucleus of the new black government. Powerful leaders of the major Transkei tribes, they all seek the main job of chief minister in the new government.

Chilean Economist Proposes World Financial Revolution

By BEN F. MEYER

WASHINGTON (AP)—A Chilean economist and diplomat has put forward a revolutionary plan to reorganize world finance and trade.

Circulated privately up to now, his proposals could produce a sensation at the annual meetings here Sept. 30-Oct 4 of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

This is because some of the smaller countries have been insisting for years that both institutions, and especially the fund, should liberalize their rules to give more help to the little countries.

Dr. Fernando Illanes is the author of the proposals. He says, "the little countries, if listened to, might well lead the big countries out of the increasingly difficult morass of financial and trade problems.

SHOCK SCHEME

His program includes such startling suggestions as:

1. A rise in the price of gold, with consequent devaluation of the U.S. dollar, the British pound and other currencies used as monetary reserves.

2. Increased trade, through a form of subsidy if necessary, and greater economic aid, for developing countries.

3. Sharp reduction or elimination of tariffs and other barriers to trade.

4. Greatly increased use of regional economic agreements to enable small countries, with limited markets, to develop industries and boost their own living standards.

The plan, Dr. Illanes says, would increase the availability of money to foster greater trade, economic development and social progress.

SAYS SYSTEM SICK

"If the proposals sound somewhat radical or revolutionary, it should be born in mind that world finance is sick — much sicker than is generally recognized, and drastic measures are indicated," he asserts.

Dr. Illanes is one of the 18 executive directors of the 92-nation World Bank. He represents Argentina, Chile, Bolivia, Uruguay and Paraguay on the board.

His views, he emphasizes, "are my personal views, and I am not talking for the bank or for the government of Chile."

His proposals will not be submitted formally to the meetings of governors of the bank and monetary fund. If past practice is followed, however, they will be discussed widely by financial officials of the world nations gathering for the meeting, and especially by the smaller nations.

Dr. Illanes was asked if there might not be grave dangers of inflation if hard currencies are devalued.

He replied:

"The plan would avoid inflation and tend to reduce the prices of foreign products because of the reduced tariffs or other duties."

Cabinet Minister Defends Quebec Secession Right

PORT - ROUGE, Que. (CP)—Provincial Secretary Bona Arsenault said here that Quebec, having entered into Confederation freely, would have "incontestable" right to get out of it "if the hopes we have placed in it do not become concrete."

Mr. Arsenault was addressing a Quebec Liberal Federation meeting in this community 30 miles southeast of Quebec City.

"Quebec some day will not be able to avoid the necessity of regaining all the sovereign powers necessary to her evolution," Mr. Arsenault said, "unless there is a new a completely satisfactory association with our partners of the English language in this country."

Recalling the "peaceful emancipation" of Canada under Great Britain, the provincial secretary said English-speaking Canadians, "in their attitude towards the Quebec nationalist movement, should be inspired by the same wise and happy understanding which their fathers and cousins of Great Britain showed towards them."

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
1♣	Pass	Pass	2♦
Pass	2NT	Pass	3NT

Opening lead—ace of spades.

The finesse as an instrument of play is one of declarer's best weapons, but there is no doubt that it is used to excess. The opportunity to finesse occurs in a high percentage of hands, but that does not mean that the opportunity should always be seized.

Some finesses are rejected because there is a different method of play that entails less risk, while others are rejected on the basis that the finesse cannot succeed and should therefore not be attempted.

Here is such a case. South is in three notrump and West leads the ace and another spade. East takes the king and returns the ten to force out the queen.

If South now leads a diamond and finesses, East wins with the king and cashes two spades and a club to defeat the contract two tricks. But if South goes up with the ace, catching the king, he makes four notrump.

Actually declarer should make the contract— even though the suggested play of the ace does seem to smack of hindsight.

There is good reason for refusing the finesse. It does not make much sense to assume that West passed his partner's opening spade bid with a hand that included both the ace of spades (already played) and the king of diamonds.

And if West does not have the king of diamonds, there is only one place it can be—in East's hand. Granted that the king is not likely to be a singleton, still this possibility cannot be dismissed, since going up with the ace offers some chance of success while the finesse offers none.

Of course, it is West's privilege— holding the spade ace and diamond king— to pass East's spade bid if he wants to, and he cannot be deprived of his citizenship if he does, but the odds against this being the case are prohibitive. It is far more realistic to assume that East has the diamond king after West shows up with the spade ace.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
