FAITHFUL

By Margaret Gorman Nichols

"And you took it seriously? Iris, my dearest, the only relative I care a hang about is my aunt Rita, a wise old lady who knows all about you and listened with her hand cupped to her ear and then suggested the most shocking means of making you listen to reason. She's a power in society and she'll adore you. Are there any more foolish questions before I speak to the captain? He's an old friend of mine. I'll ask him if he can spare the time to come down and marry us. You don't want to postpone it, do you, Iris?"

"You know I don't."

"Then we'll call in two surprised and I hope romantically minded passengers to act as witnesses . . ." He went out, leaving Iris standing in the middle of the stateroom, her hands clasped in front of her, her eyes misty with happiness.
Mark's heavy winter coat was on a chair. She put it on, looking quite lost in its bigness, and went on deck and let the wind play merrily through her blowing hair and dry her tears while she waited for him to come back. Good-bye, she was saying, to everything except this consuming happiness.

The lights of the city became smaller. Smiling, she turned her face away from the vanishing city, turned her back upon everything that had gone before in her life, and looked ahead with chin uplifted, with eyes that were unafraid.

Mark was beside her.

"The captain said he'd do the right thing, his my stowaway," he said, drawing her close again.

With difficulty because of the big coat she put her arms around him.

"The bride has nothing to wear," she said, laughing.

"There are thousands of frocks in Paris and they shall all be yours. What are you thinking about now?"

"I was wondering if that cab driver is still waiting."

Mark asked, "Iris, which way are you looking?"

"Ahead."

PERFUME AND ITS RELATION TO COLOR

Most perfume experts assert that perfumes should be individual, should harmonize with one's personality. Yet, unfortunately, the modern give a woman much idea of how to select her own individual fragrance. Of course, women do not fall into neat little classes, and it would therefore be impossible for anyone to designate the correct perfume for every woman. There are, however, several rough rules that one well-known perfumer designed to guide women in their selection of floral perfumes, and they're really quite helpful.

Lily of the valley, for instance, bespeaks youthfulness and bouyancy of spirit, and generally is suggested for young brunettes. The exclusive and delicate scent of jasmine adds depth to the personality of the ashen and brown-eyed blonde. The modest violet scent, denoting delicacy and womanly charm, is well suited to the shy, fluffy, fragile type. Heliotrope, which suggests constancy and faithfulness, is for the old-fashioned, home-loving type.

According to the art professor at one of our leading universities, perfumes are also closely related to color. He claims that to be charismatically attractive, the scent a girl uses must be as well suited to her attire as the deliciously woody scent of pine is to a forest. With this idea in mind, he has composed a chart for the proper use of perfumes in regard both to color and to occasion. The chart is as follows:

Honeysuckle: Suited to soft warm, tans and light, warm shades. Decidedly feminine in character.
Violet: Suited to medium, dark hues. Very feminine, denoting purity and sincerity.
Jasmine: Especially suited for light, spring shades. Both feminine and masculine in character.
Narcissus: For light, warm colors, especially gold, peach, apricot and plum.
Magnolia and Hyacinth: Suitable for deep colors, such as black, navy blue and brown.
Lily of the Valley: Best with pastel shades. Dainty, youthful and sweet.

EXCELLENT SHOWING FROM AN UNGRADED COUNTRY
SCHOOL—Congratulations are extended to Miss Laura Johnston, Suffolk, on attaining an average of 80 per cent in the First Year exams in P. W. C. by attending and studying in her own school, also to her energetic teacher Miss Mildred Coffin for keeping in touch with the professors and students with the work done throughout the year and for helping her with her daily studies. This reflects great credit on both teacher and pupils when we consider so many fall on account of not being able to make the necessary 65 per cent pass, these having the advantage by attending the faculty and by having professors and all the necessary equipment at their disposal. Miss Johnston also won the Queen's County scholarship in the matriculation exams with Miss Coffin as her teacher last year. Miss Johnston does not plan to enter college till a later date as she will not be fifteen till the latter part of September.

THE BAPTIST CHURCH

The Rev. H. L. Denton, D.D., preached the third of a series of sermons on "Strange Religion" at the morning service yesterday, taking as the theme for the service "Strange People." St. Peter in his first epistle, chapter 4 and verse 4 says "Wherein they think it strange that ye do not with them." The people of Antioch found in this group of followers after Jesus a strange fervour, with strange standards and strange beliefs. And they called these strange people, for the first time, Christians.

They were and ought to be a people found strange for the things they chose not to do. Many things that the easy standards of the Syrian city passed as harmless, these strange people could not practise, nor entertain, nor tolerate. In our days we hear much of "self expression" which in many ways appears a garbage pall philosophy of life. True self expression does not consist in permitting the saying and doing of the lowest, but seeks after the noblest and highest. These "Strange people" were a folk of a single course, described in the words "enter ye in at the strait gate." These people seemed strange in their peculiar relationship to the Eternal God, a peculiar people, a royal priesthood, a relationship that expressed itself in the martyr's faith.

They were a people of a strange obsession, an enthusiastic zest for doing good both as leading to their own higher development and as building toward the kingdom of God. Too long has goodness been strange upon earth, too oft has truth come unto its own and its own received not. Ours is it to-day to be of this people committed to Christ and His kingdom. So shall His kingdom come.

Miss Margaret Sterns sang with rich expression Bain's "Still still
