CLOTHES OF A QUEEN.

HER MAJESTY TAKES A WARM INTEREST IN THOSE SHE WEARS.

Their Effect Also of Much Concern to the Royal Lady—What Becomes of Her Old Clothes—Her Caps and Her Boots—The Dressing Room.

The recipient of many of Queen Victoria's cast off garments is Clary, a little draper in Windsor.

Clary is the personal friend of Queen Victoria's head dresser. It is not a friendship to be despised, since to the head dresser falls all Her Majesty's cast-off apparel. As royalty never wears the same cap or nightdress more than once, the head dresser is well worth "cultivating." Queen Victoria has very pretty feet. They are smaller and daintier than the feet of any of her children. She always wears an old fashioned congress gaiter, and her last is in the keeping of the provincial bootmakers at Windsor and Balmoral, as well as the court maker in London. Likewise have the provincial drapers the block upon which is fashioned Her Majesty's caps. This block is made to fit her head closely, and in a quarter of a century the style has scarcely varied. The caps are always made of fine white crepe lisse. The light frame is edged with fine white silk wire, upon which three little crepe lisse frills are sewed, to meet in the back two long fine streamers daintily hemstitched by hand. The streamers fall to the waist line. When completed the whole must not weigh more than three ounces.

The Queen orders these caps by the dozen. Six dozen caps generally suffice for a single sojourn at Windsor Castle. She took four dozen with her on her last visit to Grnsse. Six dozen night dresses are crumpled during a Windsor visit. Never is the same nightdress worn a second time, even after laundering. Who gets them? Ah, that's the head-dresser's secret. It is suspected that she has a fine trade in royal rubbish.

Her Majesty's mantles are always made after the same model. They number six for winter and six for summer wear. Black materials of various degrees of weight and warmth make the winter wraps, while those reserved for summer are made of rich white silk, daintily lined and timmed with four or six bands of narrow black braid or cord, and finished with deep black silk fringe. The white mantles are worn when Victoria takes her daily drive in the vicinity of Windsor, where her presence excites little attention from the townsfolk. Indeed, so democratic is our ruler that she not unfrequently drives out through the stable door, to the chagrin of curious strangers always congregated at the main entrance to the castle grounds. The coachman never knows which direction she wishes to follow. That caprice is confided solely to the single outrider that accompanies her in these rural drives.

On the occasion of the opening of the institution founded in London in commemoration of Her Majesty's jubilee, the Duke of Connaught delivered in person to the provincial draper the order for Her Majesty's bonnet and mantles. Not until the night before the auspicious event, however, did the Duke confess to the Queen that he had ordered the neck of the mantle to be trimmed with ostrich feather trimming.

The Queen was much disturbed. She retired before the mantle put in an appearance at the castle, but she could not sleep. "If there are feathers on my cloak," she finally announced to the maid, with truly feminine petulance, "I will not wear it to morrow. The people will say, 'There's the Queen! She is fatter than ever!'" Needless to add, the feathers were discarded.

Royalty suffers as much anxiety in preparing for public functions as does its brother of the common clay. There is as much excitement in the royal household in preparing for a state function as in the modest establishment. Everybody tries on her dresses and hats and comes in for Her Majesty's inspection days before the event takes place. The effect each is likely to produce on the public beholder is weighed and considered as carefully as the personal like or dislike of the wearer. The members of the royal family, it is refreshing to know, are very human in their dress rehearsals, and the brothers and sisters are not above personal bantering.

"I know Beatrice will cry," the brothers were wont to say, and the Princess of Battenberg, being very nervous, not infrequently dissolved into tears on the spot.

Next to Her Majesty's sleeping chamber is the dressing-room, in which, on long, low shelves, her mantles, caps and shoes are laid. They make a curious picture—a study in black and white. Two maids undress the queen and put her to bed. Before she gets into bed they heat and spread between the Irish linen sheets a white blanket, part wool, part cotton, and bound with white silk ribbon, with the royal arms embroidered in the corner. Queen Victoria reclines upon the blanket until the body is thoroughly heated. The maids then withdraw the blanket, and the finest product of Ireland's loom embraces the Queen of England and the Empress of India.

"Gone, Sir, Gone."

Landseer, the wonderful animal painter, often told an amusing story, of which he was the hero, to illustrate that a man must go from home to learn the news about himself.

One day while walking in London he saw in the window of a picture-dealer a good specimen of his own work. Stepping inside he asked the name of the painter.

The salesman said the picture was a genuine Landseer, and one of the best he ever painted. Taking up the picture and critically examining it, Landseer asked if the dealer would warrant it.

"Most certainly," replied the salesman, "and what is more, he will never paint another."

"How's that?" asked the painter.

"Gone, sir, gone," answered the man, putting his finger to his forehead; "gone, sir, completely off his head, and not like ever to recover."

Landseer hurried out, that he might have a good laugh without betraying his identity.—Household.

SUPERIOR FOWLS.

Advantages of Raising Pure Bred Chickens —Improve the Flock.

While it is probably not best for persons just starting into the poultry business to invest large sums in producing highly-bred fowls they should get the best their means will afford and endeavor to improve the breeding of the stock each year. However, many poultry raisers (especially inexperienced ones) profess to not understand the advantage of pure-bred fowls over those of common blood. In the main, the advantage of thoroughbred stock over the common lies in the ability of the former to develop in less time and upon a smaller amount of food than the latter. The Jersey cow will, in a given time, turn a certain amount of food into a great deal more butter fat than will any common cow, and the Shorthorn breed of cattle will make far more beef from a certain amount of food than any common stock, and do it in less time. The same rule applies to thoroughbred poultry, says a writer in Western Poultry News. Each breed has well-known characteristics. A Leghorn hen, given the same amount of food as a common one, will lay more eggs. Then the Leghorn and other pure-bred hens develop several months sooner than the common fowls. The Langshan, Plymouth Rock and Wyandotte fowls all develop very quickly and at an early age have nice plump bodies, nicely feathered in, and make the nicest kind of early broilers. They mature early, lay double the number of eggs that a common hen will, and when turned off for market will bring more money than the common ones. With wheat at 50 cents a bushel and eggs at 15 cents a dozen, there are hens which will turn a bushel of wheat into ten dozen eggs worth $1.50, thus increasing the profits on the grain three-fold. These facts have been demonstrated time and again, and it seems rank nonsense to continue raising scrub chickens year after year without in any way endeavoring to improve the quality of the flock. A trio of fowls and a few dozen eggs are enough to start with. Or the flock can be improved by mating commonhens with a good thoroughbred male. If eggs are the chief thing wanted get a Leghorn cockerel. If eggs and flesh both are desired it will be best to get a Langshan, Plymouth Rock or Wyandotte male.

The average size of the members of the flock can be greatly increased by mating the hens with Brahmas or Cochins. In comparison with the amount of the investment, there is no other stock that pays as well as poultry, and it possesses the additional advantage that with a moderate capital you can have as good as the best, while it takes considerable money to buy fine cattle and horses. The reason why some are disappointed with thoroughbred fowls is because they don't give them as good treatment as they would horses and cattle. The small care be stowed on the fowls will give a greater profit, and they are deserving of it. The value of eggs and poultry sold in the markets of this country the past year was three hundred million dollars, and yet eggs were imported to meet the demand.

Does Your Cow Pay?

There are thousands of cows kept for the dairy and for domestic use which do not pay for their keep, and should as soon as possible be sold to the butcher. As long as this class of stock is tolerated to a large extent the same kind of stock will be perpetuated by breeding from inferior animals. By a constant weeding out and by a careful selection of the best to be found the standard will be rapidly raised, and the profits of the dairy will be greatly enhanced. The question now arises as to the most perfect method of testing the capacity of the cow to produce, when she is provided with all the requisites of food and care. The scientists have provided the instrument for making the tests of percentage of butter fat in the milk, and the one universally endorsed is the Babcock tester. Then the milk may be weighed and an estimate made on what the cow will produce in a year, or during the period of lactation.

In testing a cow it is found that the fourth month after calving she gives milk near the average quality for the whole year. Make two tests, fifteen days apart, and in each test use the milk of eight consecutive milkings and the average of these two tests will give the approximate average of the quality for the year. By knowing the amount of milk given during the year one can then get a pretty accurate estimate of the quantity of butter fats the cow gives.—Western Rural.

Animal Fertilizers.

A dead animal of any kind, fish, fowl or beast, buried near the roots of a fruit or other tree will cause a wonderful growth. The animal substance does not pass into the vegetable, but, being a natural and a powerful generator of electricity, increases the current that passes from the atmosphere to the earth, and thereby a large quantity of support is drawn from the atmosphere, says Foster's Weather Bureau. You can grow a good crop of potatoes on a brick pavement if moisture is retained and the potato vines are connected with moist earth by copper wires.

Commercial fertilizers do not enrich the soil, do not add anything to it that is of value. The object sought in these fertilizers is to put the soil into a condition that will enable it to conduct electricity. The electrical current passes into the vegetable through its leaves, carrying with it the gross matter that goes to build up the vegetable cells, and after that matter is deposited in the vegetable the electric current must have a conductor through which to pass to the earth.

Worn out soils are poor conductors, and the acids used in the commercial fertilizers, which are little more than acids and sand, pulverize the dead soil and enliven it for a short time.

Good Animal Pointers.

Animals have a social nature and the domestic animals a friendly feeling for the kind hand that affords shelter and the daily supplies which add to their comfort and growth. Though the selfish owner may have in view the premature ending of the fatting carcass or the perpetual servitude of the patient beast he should be humane and kind in the highest degree. If you are out of patience kick the side of the barn or yourself but never the dumb animal which is at your mercy. This is not only humane but it pays in more ways than one. Make pets of the animals and they will be much more easy to handle and bring much better returns in the way of profit. Let the indifferent farmer try it and see what an elevating influence it will have on himself as well as the stock.

Puttner's Emulsion contains neither Quinine, strychnine, nor other harmful drug. Its ingredients are wholesome animal and vegetable substances, and it may be taken indefinitely without dangerous results.
