STRANGE BUT TRUE
By F. H. MacArthur

Every time the president of the United States goes to church he puts a $5 bill in the collection plate. This custom has been in vogue ever since Grover Cleveland occupied the White House.
Half of the food produced by Canadian farmers is produced by 12 per cent of the farmers.
Although you are required by law to take out a fishing license, it is against the law to take silvery grunion fish with a line or net in California. But strange but true, you are allowed to catch em with your bare hands.
There's one way you could cross the Atlantic without getting seasick. How? By making the voyage in a submarine. Waves do not effect the water below 100 feet.
Here's a picture of life as it was lived in pioneer days in this province. In a sense, it was the same as it had been in rural sections of the British Isles. The habitant was content to live as his fathers had lived; to cultivate a bit of cleared land with a primitive plow, to gossip at the grist mill, or to drink a mug of rum at the tavern.
The homes of the well-to-do didn't vary much from the homes of the poorest pioneers. Inside there was hardly a great difference either, and what there was came more from the quality of the furnishings than from their quality.
The kitchen was the center of family life as it had been in Europe for centuries. It was the only room that was heated unless the chimney was a double one in the middle of the house. On the hearth under the huge mantle of the crude fireplace stood the iron firedogs along with the indispen-sible pothook and spit. The pots, pans, and so on were arranged in order nearby. There were copper and wood candlesticks for holding the homemade candles, and sometimes a pair of snuffers.
There were also iron lanterns on the mantelpiece for use outside at night. And on pegs above the door leading to the outside rested the habitant's gun and powder horn.
A large table made from Island pine or oak stood in the center of the room. Ranged along the wall were a few armless straight-backed chairs for the older members of the family and the infrequent guest. The small fry sat on wooden benches that had to be dragged to the table at mealtime.

Almost every home boasted a large family chest into which went the settlers best clothes, his trade goods, his money — if he had any — his marriage licence, the title of his land and what not.
Proudly displayed on a giant-sized sideboard stood the housewife's pewter and crockery. Her refrigerator was the cellar. And she did not have to thaw out her meat before cooking it as housewives do in our day. Glass tableware and silver sets were just about as scarce as hen's teeth.
Table knives were not common and forks were made of steel or iron.
Perhaps the most cherished piece of furniture in the house was the bed. Frequently it was the only dowry of the Island bride, and the marriage contract assured its ownership to the survivor of the union. The bed was big, too, six-foot or more square, topped with a straw mattress or a well-filled feather tick, and draped and curtained with various colored hangings. Buffalo hides and coarse wool blankets served for covers when the nights were cold. Some of the smaller children slept on cots or three or four to a bed; no doubt some slept on the floor in cases of very large families, for only occasionally do we find more than one or two beds listed in an inventory.
A wardrobe, often a huge piece of furniture with drawers unlimited completed the furnishings of the pioneer's humble home. It was used for storing clothing and other household goods.
Mirrors were not too common; neither were pocket watches. The ordinary mortal depended on the sun to tell him the time of day when working in forest or field.
