Ont. Coroner Plans Curb Of Cases Of Child Beating

TORONTO (CP)—The office of Ontario's supervising coroner is considering sitting up a central registry to help curb the phenomenon known with ugly preciseness as "the battered child syndrome".

"We are inquiring into the possibility of a central registry where all cases of unexplained death or injury to children can be recorded and filed for quick reference," says Jack Mills, executive officer in the office of Supervising Coroner Dr. Harvey R. Cotnam.

"We feel this could be an important factor in bringing in light cases of cruelty to children and preventing, in particular, cases of battered child syndrome."

Dr. Cotnam recently defined the syndrome as the clinical condition seen in young children who have been the victims of serious physical abuse, sometimes leading to permanent injury or death.

Syndrome means all the symptoms of a disease. And the knowledge that such symptoms are common enough in the case of child-beating to merit classification as a second devlopment. The term has come into common usage only within the last five years.

MANY UNDETECTED

Yet, Dr. Cotnam said, for every child who dies of neglect, malnutrition or beating in Ontario, there are 100 others who are mistreated without it coming to the attention of the authorities.

The coroner's office cited the case of a woman, three of whose children died in different Ontario cities in unexplained circumstances—two of suffocation and the third of an overdose of sleeping pills.

The office got onto the case because of an unusual surname involved. And at the time of the discovery of the case, a fourth child of the woman was in a Northern Ontario hospital suffering from an overdose of headache tablets.

The mother has since spent time in a mental hospital and now is now caring for the surviving child, under the supervision of the Children's Aid Society.

A psychiatrist and a radiologist in Toronto said in interviews they both believe a tremendous number of children suffer broken bones and other permanent deformities through the brutality of parents.

CLUES HIDDEN

"There may be no clue in the outward behavior of a person to indicate whether he or she is capable of this sort of thing," said Dr. Edward J. Rosen, director of the child and adolescentunit of Toronto Psychiatric Hospital. Dr. John D. Munn, director of the Hospital for Sick Children's radiology department said x - ray photographs are often the only evidence of injury.

Dr. Cotnam said cases of young children being battered to death in secret by a parent or custodian are being reported to his office at the rate of one a month. In January, there were three such cases in 10 days.

"Many parents involved in this problem are said to be psychopathic or sociopathic characters without any sense of good and evil, and alcoholism, sexual promiscuity, unstable marriages and minor and major criminal activities are common amongst them.

"They may be immature, impulsive, unstable emotionally, and have uncontrollable tempers. . . ."

But the "battered child" is also found in so-called good homes among people with good education and background.

One of the greatest problems about the "battered child syndrome" is the lack of knowledge about it. A central registry of victims is seen as a start toward preventing repetition of past beatings and a source of material to cast light on the problem.

Smuggling People Into U.S. Grows Tougher Year By Year

By FRANCIS STILLEY

NEW YORK (AP)—Organized rings overseas are trying harder than ever to smuggle people into the United States.

They're also having less success than ever before, the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service reports.

But in the process they're muleting millions of dollars from their hapless victims at fees ranging from $50 to $2,000.

The rings try to sneak most of them into the U.S. by ship. A few are sent by plane and by land across the borders of Mexico and Canada.

Some fantastic — and often torturous—methods of concealment are devised.

People have arrived half-starved, nearly frozen or almost asphyxiated. One died of burns in one of the most bizarre stowaway schemes of all.

Some details of the situation were disclosed to The Associated Press by Robert G. Germain, assistant chief of the immigration service here.

He said the major organizations are in Italy, Sicily, Sardinia, France and Rotterdam in Holland, and the Bahamas and Trinidad in the Caribbean area.

Last year immigration agents nabbed 35,969 illegal aliens in the U.S.

Germain cited these as examples of methods devised to smuggle people into the U.S.:

One man spent hours as a ship docked here cramped behind a false wall in a cubicle measuring eight by 15 inches and 4½ feet deep. He was breathing through a rubber tube extended through the bottom of the cubicle. But he dropped the tube and couldn't retrieve it. He was almost asphyxiated.

A large storage tank on the outer deck of a ship provided quarters for one stowaway. However, it was a bitter December day and the stowaway nearly froze. He began pounding to get out. Agents assisted him.

One man crossed the border from Mexico under the hood of a car, lying atop the motor. The motor caught fire and the driver couldn't get the hood catch to release immediately. The stowaway died the next day of burns.

A few days ago two Chinese dived from a ship approaching New York and tried to swim to Staten Island. Both were drowned.

Harpsichord Manufacture Flourishes

VANCOUVER (CP)—An old world craft, the manufacture of harpsichords, is flourishing in modern Vancouver.

The harpsichord is a stringed musical instrument played from a keyboard. It originated in the 14th century, but in later years, was crowded out of popularity for the piano.

It still has its admirers, however, and craftsmen to cater to the diehard band of harpsichord lovers.

Canada's only harpsichord manufacturers are Sigurd Sabathil, 35, and his father Simon, 65, of Vancouver.

Six United States firms make harpsichords, but the Sabathil instruments are so highly regarded that they are in constant export demand. Last year, the Sabathils made 30 harpsichords in their workshop, 25 of them for sale in the U.S.

The instruments are priced from $600 to $3,000, depending on the number of keyboards. There are either one or two and each can have 54 or 61 keys.

Simon started making pianos and harpsichords in his native Czechoslovakia when he was 14. Sigurd started working for him while still a schoolboy.

When Sigurd arrived here in 1939, his luggage consisted of three harpsichords. He began selling the instruments, was "overwhelmed by such a wave of optimism" that he sent for his parents in 1960. Father and son have been a going concern since.

Local materials are used to manufacture the instruments, with the exception of the keyboard, a highly technical and specialized device which is imported from Germany.

Opening lead—eight of spades.

Most hands played by declarer require no more than orderly thinking for the best result to be achieved. The tendency to concentrate on the play of a particular suit instead of on the play of the hand as a whole is a common failing responsible for the defeat of many contracts.

Here is a type of hand where many declarers would go wrong. West leads a spade against three notrump and South takes the nine with the queen. How should he play the hand?

He is known at six ready - made tricks — two spades, two hearts and two clubs — and has to build up three more to make the contract.

He can lead a diamond to the queen and force out the ace (which East, on the bidding, is almost sure to have), but this will give him only two additional tricks and leave him one short of the contract.

Or he may play the A-K and another club in the hope of finding that suit divided 3-2, but this will also bring him to only eight tricks.

Since neither of these methods of play looks very promising, South should look elsewhere to see if he can produce the necessary ninth trick. And if he studies the situation carefully, he will come up with the method of play that gives him a legitimate chance of making the contract.

At trick two he plays a club to the king and returns a low diamond from dummy. East cannot afford to go up with the ace, which would immediately give declarer three diamond tricks and the contract. So let's say he ducks and lets South win with the king.

Having "stolen" this trick, declarer now abandons the suit and plays the ace and another club. When it turns out that the clubs are divided 3-2, South then had nine tricks to show for his efforts.

A little planning at the start pays off in the end.

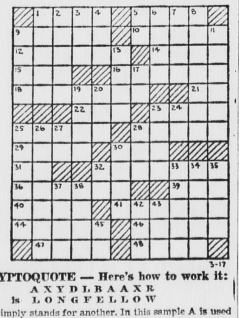
Yesterday's Answer



DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
